French-German final seen with Brazil's debacle

By Amando Doronila

FRANCE ENDED BRAZIL'S DREAM OF winning a sixth World Cup with a stunning 1-0 upset in the quarterfinals in Frankfurt on Friday that sent thousands of Parisians dancing on the Champs Elysees and Rio de Janeiro's multitudes grieving.

Brazilians had come to believe that it was Brazil's divine right to be the longest-serving king of the world's most watched spectator sport.

ANALYSIS

In Paris, the "Marseillaise" stirred up national pride to a pitch approaching that of the Liberation of France in 1945. In Rio, the samba and carnival had to wait for another day.

The exit of the Brazilians, the tournament's hot favorites, marked the third time France had defeated Brazil in their World Cup encounters. In the 1998 World Cup final, hosted by Paris, France defeated Brazil 3-0. In 1986, France won in the quarterfinals as it did last weekend.

France has only cleared the most formidable obstacle in its quest to add another World Cup title since 1998. The defeat of Brazil sets the stage for an epic French face-off with a historic enemy in the battlefields of Europe, Germany, which on Thursday defeated Argentina 4-2.

Germany takes on Italy in the semifinals on Tuesday at Dortmund; France plays Portugal on Wednesday in Munich. Barring upsets, it is the German-French encounter that is putting football fans all over the world on edge. It promises a rare all-European showdown in World Cup history between two European economic and political superpowers, let alone soccer superpowers.

On the football pitch, these two ancient enemies will prove their power, other than in the battlefields of Europe, where their armies had fought three great wars within a century—the Franco-Prussian war of the

'DepEd can't

By Christian V. Esguerra and Alcuin Papa

EDUCATION OFFICIALS ARE "FEIGNING ignorance" over the controversial sex education modules reportedly in use around the country, according to a longtime public school teacher.

To find such materials—one of which allegedly suggests the murder of an adulterous husband in his sleep—officials just need to visit any nearby public school, said Filipina Rañada, an expert on special education.

"The problem is they're feigning ignorance when, in fact, they were the ones who introduced the modules," she said in an interview with the INQUIRER on Saturday.

Rañada earlier blew the whistle on the Department of Education for its plan to "pilot-test" a new batch of sex education modules in public schools in Pateros and Parañaque City.

She said these materials were updated versions of those first introduced in the country in 1973. They had since been "upgraded and enhanced" in 1983, 1993 and 1996.

Some of the new batch's forerunners included lessons that purportedly allowed teachers to ask Grade 5 pupils to bring egg-

UP AND DOWN: Filipino boxing idol Manny Pacquiao (top) raises his hands in victory under a giant Philippine flag after a bruising 12-round battle with Mexican Oscar Larios (bottom), who was down on the floor anew in the final round at the Araneta Coliseum in Quezon City. Pacquiao won by unanimous decision.

EDWIN BACASHAS

FOR A BRIEF MOMENT in the third round, a hush fell over the Araneta Coliseum, interrupted only by surprised, uneasy gasps.

Manny Pacquiao, the boxing hero many believed to be unconquerable, was at the receiving end of a barrage of blows from Mexican Oscar "Cholo" Larios, the challenger many felt was just a piece of meat tossed into the lion's den.

Then, from the far corners of the coliseum, a chant cut through the silence and built up to a roar as the crowd repeatedly shouted Pacquiao's name.

At that, the Filipino ring icon turned everything around in an instant, showing the speed and power that have made him a byword in the 130-lb ranks, to twice floor Larios, come out a unanimous decision winner and retain his WBC international super featherweight title.

"This is for all the Filipinos who always watch me fight and support me," Pacquiao said in Filipino after yesterday's noontime bout at the Big Dome.

Egged on by the crowd that had shelled out their hard-earned money to purchase pricey tickets to watch him live, the General Santos native knocked Larios down midway in the seventh round with a solid right to the jaw and then floored the challenger again 45 seconds before the final bell with a combination set up by a crisp left jab.

Although none of those knockdowns welded Larios to the canvas for good—the Mexican got up quickly both times—it was enough to ice the victory Pacquiao had promised his JEEPNEY DRIVERS STOPPED PLYING THEIR routes. Church attendance was down. Malls, normally packed by noon on a Sunday, cried out for customers.

College sophomore Mae Santos, 18, summed it all up. No lover of the blood sport, she crossed her fingers for a Manny Pacquiao victory.

"Even if I'm not a sports fan, I'm still a Filipino," she told the INQUIRER as she navigated her way through Robinson's Place in Ermita, Manila, where the crowd of customers was noticeably thin because many of the usual shoppers had stayed home to watch the fight.

For a day, everybody seemed to be a Pacquiao fan—well, almost everybody. Three Roman Catholic bishops whom the INQUIRER texted—Oscar Cruz, Deogracias Ifiguez and Armed men torch Bayan Muna radio station

GAMU, ISABELA—UNIDENTIFIED men using two soft drink bottles containing chemicals set ablaze a community radio station operated by the leftist group Bayan Muna and the local government yesterday, causing damage estimated at P1.5 million but no injuries.

Senior Supt. James Andres Melad, Cagayan police director, said at least eight armed men went to the station of dwRC Radyo Cagayano in Barangay Centro at about 2 a.m. and torched the station's transmitter and broadcast booth.

Melad said the attackers also took the mobile phones of station manager Susan Mapa and five staff members.

The facility, put up by Bayan Muna and the local government only a month ago, had been critical of alleged abuses by the military in Cagayan Valley, Melad said.

Grace Bautista, secretary general of the human rights advocate Karapatan in Cagayan Valley, blamed the military for the attack, saying the station had

'Tagaytay 5' tell tale of terror in police custody

By TJ Burgonio

AS A PRESS OFFICER FOR A LEFTIST farmers' group advocating agrarian reform for four years now, poet Axel Alejandro Pinpin knew he could be picked up by police for questioning at anytime. Pinpin had played the scene in his mind quite a few times. But when it happened, he was horrified. So were his four companions—Aristides Sarmiento, Riel Custodio, Michael Masayes and Rico Ybanez.

Pinpin and his companions lived to tell the tale, but their ordeal is far from over.

The five were cruising on a road by a ridge in Tagaytay City on the night of April 28 when suddenly a white van blocked their path. Within seconds, men wielding long firearms had jumped out, barking orders for them to get off.

They were cuffed behind their backs, shoved into the van and blindfolded. What followed were three days and three nights of intense interrogation and detention in different safehouses.

Their blindfolds still on, some of them were punched and kicked around. And once they were questioned inside

GMA brings home $380M in projects

By Christine O. Avendano

PRESIDENT MACAPAGAL-ARROYO CLINCHED FOUR projects worth $380 million or P20.3 billion for oil and gas, hotel and resort, and infrastructure development during her week-long trip to Spain and Italy.

The President said she met with the largest economic group in Spain, the Confederación Española de Organizaciones Empresariales, which also expressed interest in investing in the Philippines' tourism, mining and energy sectors, and in the area of information technology.

Tourism Secretary Joseph Ace Durano told reporters yesterday that two of the largest hotel chains in Spain, Occidental and New Rotana, each signified interest in building a 200- to 400-room hotel in the Philippines which would mean between a P2- to P4-billion investment.

Durano said representatives of the two hotel chains, whose international operations have long been confined to Latin America, were planning to visit the country.

It would be the first time these two hotel chains will enter Asia, he said, adding that the country's pristine beaches remained its biggest tourist attraction.

Warm greetings

Aside from the sizable investment deals, Ms Arroyo also brought home the "warm greetings of the leaders I encountered and the good tidings of our kababayans in that part of the world," according to the President's arrival statement, released by Malacañang.

"The leaders welcomed the profile, profamily and propeople vision of the Filipinos in behalf of their people," said Ms Arroyo, who met with Italian leaders President Giorgio Napolitano and Prime Minister Romano Prodi, as well as Spanish Prime Minister Jose Luis Rodriguez Zapatero.

The President also met with Pope Benedict XVI who told her he would pray for the Filipinos and for the country's development.

Return to Spain

Ms Arroyo also announced that she would be returning to Spain next year. She had accepted the invitation of Spain's King Juan Carlos I and Queen Sofia to go back for a state visit.

"His Majesty King Juan Carlos I and Queen Sofia accorded me their warmest and most gracious welcome and I was honored to accept His Majesty's invitation for a state visit to Spain next year," the statement said.

Ms Arroyo said her visit to Spain next year would coincide with the 60th anniversary of the establishment of diplomatic relations between the Philippines and Spain.

GMA can't be ousted now, says Gonzales

By Christine O. Avendano

THE ARROYO ADMINISTRATION cannot be toppled by any opposition group, according to National Security Adviser Norberto Gonzales.

Gonzales said this was the assessment of the government today and "that's why our emphasis is more on [pursuing] fundamental reforms."

"No opposition group in the Philippines, individually or [combined], is capable of toppling the present government," Gonzales told reporters yesterday at Villamor Air Base in Pasay City as he and other Cabinet members waited for President Macapagal-Arroyo to arrive from her week-long trip to Europe.

"We are no longer bothered by what the opposition is planning to do," Gonzales said, insisting that the opposition was "far weaker today than last year."

The President came home yesterday, greeted by new impeachment complaints filed in the House of Representatives last week. The complaints, which included charges of committing election fraud in 2004, were filed one every day for four days by different opposition groups.

Executive Secretary Eduardo Ermita said the opposition's strategy of filing an impeachment complaint every day showed the "beauty of the democratic process where everyone is entitled to do what he wants to do."

Ermita said the opposition was doing this for political reasons but the "common man" could see through the antics.

He noted that the opposition still needed to "get their act together." Former Vice President Teofisto Guingona, he said, was planning to stage a civil disobedience campaign against the government.

Asked if he thought the opposition was less threatening today compared to months ago, Ermita said: "We don't want to be complacent, but things are clearer now. Hindi masiyado masalimuot ang political atmosphere (The political atmosphere is less complicated)."

And with the return of the President from Spain and Italy where she made "unprecedented trade and security gains," Press Secretary Ignacio Bunye urged the nation to preserve the benefits the government had achieved and to ignore "gutter politics."

"Promoting a good international image for the Philippines must be the responsibility of every citizen and all sectors if we want our economy to flourish amid a world of challenge and competition," Bunye said in a statement.

Embassy in Singapore gets custody of maid

THE PHILIPPINE EMBASSY IN Singapore has gained custody of the Filipino domestic helper who was arrested by the city-state's police in connection with the death of a compatriot on June 30, the Department of Foreign Affairs said yesterday.

The DFA also finally identified the victim as Sharon Villanel Pino, 28, of General Santos City.

Shortly before noon on Friday, Singapore police found Pino's body at the base of a high-rise government apartment building in Bedok South. She was pronounced dead on the spot.

Earlier that day, authorities were alerted about a fight that broke out between Pino and another Filipino maid on the 18th floor, from which Pino was believed to have fallen.

The DFA said the embassy on Saturday was given custody of the suspect, Stella Abella Concepcion, after her employer posted bail for her.

It was Concepcion who worked for a family living in the government housing project, the DFA said.

While Pino's death was made more gruesome by her fall, the DFA said Concepcion was arrested for the offense of "voluntarily causing hurt with a dangerous weapon" under the Singapore Penal Code.

"The embassy had earlier requested for custody of Ms Concepcion and she is now under the embassy's care after her employer posted bail for her," said Philippine Ambassador Belen Anota.

Anota said Concepcion would remain at the embassy until the investigation was completed, and that the mission had begun giving her counseling while exploring her legal options. Volt Contreras

Beautification funds better spent on cops, say militants

THE POLICE'S PRIORITIES ARE MISPLACED, militants said yesterday, reacting to the beautification drive in Camp Crame, the Philippine National Police headquarters in Quezon City.

Leftist activists said the P1.3 million spent to improve the camp's sidewalk and the P16 million earmarked for the construction of the PNP Heritage Park would have been better spent for the welfare of policemen.

"(Instead of) spending millions on frivolous things like fairy tale bridges and wooden benches, the money could have been added to the take-home benefits of the policemen or to their salaries," said the Kilusang Magbubukid ng Pilipinas.

"The point is, the money could have been used for the real and concrete welfare of policemen, not for superfluous projects," the KMP said.

The police brass have been beautifying Camp Crame, beginning with the construction last year of Heritage Park which will feature a battle monument on which will be inscribed the names of fallen policemen. The park will also highlight the achievements of the police force since its inception in 1901.

Crame's sidewalks have been paved with brick-red concrete tiles and lined with pocket gardens and wooden benches. As a finishing touch, fountains were put up.

Officers, militants agree

In a rare instance, some junior police officers and militants have found themselves on the same side of the fence. The officers, however, refused to speak on record for fear of being sanctioned by their superiors.

One officer said putting up a monument to honor colleagues killed in the line of duty was highly commendable.

"The rest are not," he said, calling them mere "decorative (improvements)."

"We have a problem with paying for electricity. So why do we have fountains that will consume more electricity?" he said.

He added: "We have a park and beautification, but what about investing in your personnel?"

A ranking official who defended the project had said that that was exactly what the PNP under Director General Arturo Lomibao was doing—investing in the morale and welfare of the troops by building more police stations in the countryside.

During Lomibao's term, police stations had mushroomed nationwide—in tourist spots as well as hotbeds of insurgency. Fifty-four new stations have been built, 51 are under construction and 48 are in the planning or bidding stages.

They would cost roughly P338 million to be split between the police and the local governments.

The ranking officer, who also spoke on condition of anonymity, Lomibao had also made it his priority to connect with the policemen in far-flung posts. Using the PNP's helicopters, he often visited the men in the field who—many for the first time—saw their chief in person.

"It felt good to see how moved the men were," one officer had remarked to the INQUIRER.

But KMP information officer Carl Ala said beautifying the camp would not bolster morale among the troops and may even demoralize them.

"We know that ordinary cops face a lot of difficulties," he said.

Fire hits Makati store

FIRE YESTERDAY razed the MC Home Depot on Chino Roces Avenue corner Edsa in Makati City, injuring two volunteer firefighters.

The fire began at 4:55 p.m. in Muebles Italiano, a furniture shop on the ground floor of the depot, fire investigator SFO1 Samuel Guzman told the INQUIRER.

Fire officials, finding it difficult to get near the burning structure, declared a Task Force Charlie alarm, the third highest alarm status, at 5:36 p.m. The fire caused a massive traffic jam in the area as more than 30 fire trucks arrived.

Firefighters broke huge plate glass windows to ease the pressure building inside the burning structure. Glass shards injured at least two volunteer firefighters, investigators at the scene said.

Unconfirmed reports said the fire started in an overheated computer, but Guzman said they would have to investigate the blaze to determine what caused it. Edson C. Tandoc Jr.

Sison slams gov't plan for local peace talks

By Delfin T. Mallari Jr.
PDI Southern Luzon Bureau

SELF-EXILED FILIPINO COMMUNIST leader Jose Ma. Sison blasted Malacañang's plan to conduct "localized peace talks" with New People's Army rebels and called it a "malicious scheme" to split and fragment the revolutionary movement.

Sison, founder of the Communist Party of the Philippines (CPP), described the localized talks as "mere chattering and dining sessions" among Office of the Presidential Adviser on the Peace Process (OPAPP) officials, local officials and paramilitary groups in the service of the Army and the police.

In an e-mailed statement from Utrecht, the Netherlands, he stressed that there was no instance when any bona fide member of the National Democratic Front had participated in localized peace talks.

Sison, NDF chief political consultant, said the government should only negotiate with the rebel movement panel under Luis Jalandoni.

The NDF, the political arm of the communist insurgents which groups the CPP and its armed wing, the New People's Army, and 13 other underground organizations, pulled out of the peace talks in August

The communists insisted that the government use its influence with the United States and the European Union to get the communist-led organizations removed from the US and the European Union's lists of international terrorist organizations.

Rather than attempt to resume the stalled peace talks with the NDF, Malacañang had declared that the government would initiate localized peace talks.

Two years ago, Ms Arroyo also pushed for initiatives at the local level, ordering the implementation of the terms of a peace pact with a splinter rebel faction, the Revolutionary Proletarian Army-Alex Boncayao Brigade.

According to Sison, since the second half of 2001, the Arroyo administration has been trying to sabotage the peace talk process by laying aside the previous agreements.

He recalled how Speaker de Venecia and then OPAPP Secretary Eduardo Ermita brought to Utrecht on Nov. 30, 2001, a two-page draft of a "sham final peace agreement, whose main provisions required the surrender of arms by the NPA."

He said the NDF peace panel immediately rejected the government's demand.

what they suspected to be a firing range, the interrogation broken by gunfire and taunts of "You're next!"

On their third night, they were roused and hauled into a van.

"This was the most terrifying of all. We still had our blindfolds on and they tied us up in the legs with masking tape. We thought we were going to be 'salvaged' (summarily executed)," the lanky Pinpin, 34, his hair swept back into a ponytail, said in an interview.

Pinpin and his companions all heaved a sigh of relief when their van stopped and they were herded back into their humid safe-house.

On May 1, they were taken out again for a long drive and after more than hour, their blindfolds were taken off for the first time just as their vehicle was cruising along Edsa past SM Megamall.

Minutes later, clad in orange T-shirts, they were paraded before the press at the Philippine National Police headquarters in Camp Crame as communist guerrillas out to sabotage the Labor Day rally that day.

On May 5 at the Tagaytay prosecutors' office, they were charged with rebellion for allegedly plotting to sow terror on May 1. They had been thrown together in a clean, but cramped cell inside Camp Vicente Lim in Calamba, Laguna.

Reminiscent of Marcos years

The case of the "Tagaytay 5" along with the killings of leftist activists illustrates what human rights workers describe as the deteriorating human rights situation reminiscent of the Ferdinand Marcos years.

"They are living evidence," Jessica Soto, executive director of Amnesty International-Philippines, said by telephone. They can prove and show that political killings are happening, she said.

Most of those gunned down, ambushed or waylaid in the dead of the night or even in broad daylight across the country were local leaders of Bayan Muna, a party-list group the military suspects to be a communist front.

Between January 2001, when Vice President Macapagal-Arroyo took over the presidency from ousted President Joseph Estrada, and today, 233 activists, including 98 from Bayan Muna, have been killed.

While the Arroyo administration has denied any policy to hunt down left-leaning activists, the attacks have nonetheless created a "climate of fear and impunity," Soto said.

The attacks continued even after Ms Arroyo ordered the PNP to create Task Force Usig in May to keep tabs on the killings and after the country was elected to the United Nations Human Rights Council.

Double-edged situation

"We have a double-edged situation. On the one hand, the Philippines was elected to the UN Human Rights Council," Soto said. "On the other hand, you have extrajudicial killings ... And when the President says it has to stop, there are more killings."

The task force said that only a small percentage of the attacks had been carried out by either soldiers, militiamen or policemen.

"It would appear that only 20 percent was politically motivated," Senior Insp. Henry Libay, head of the task force's secretariat, said in his office at Camp Crame as he leafed through its file on the attacks.

Of the killings of 109 party-list group leaders the task force had investigated from 2001 to the present, 23 were initially found to have been carried out by the military and police, and 10 others, by communist guerrillas. The rest were the handiwork of private persons.

The task force also looked into the killing of former rebel leader and peace talks consultant Sotero Llamas.

Lawmakers said that the case of Llamas, who was gunned down by masked men near his home in Tabaco City, Albay, on May 29, was proof of the government-instigated "state of terrorism."

Police, however, identified the assailants as communist hit men.

Killings not state policy

Libay said the suspects in the rest of the killings of the 109 party-list members and 11 leftist militants were private individuals, but conceded that the investigators had failed to establish if they were hired guns of the military or police.

There was no evidence the killings were part of a state policy or were carried out by hit squads mobilized by the military, as some militant groups had alleged, he said.

Interestingly, the task force has a smaller count of the killings because it excluded those killed in legitimate skirmishes with government troops.

So far, the task force has filed charges in 27 of the killings of party-list members and in four of the killings of militants, a low batting average if you ask the human rights groups.

Soto rued: "They need to do more. Their effort isn't enough."

Human Rights Commissioner Dominador Calamba II agreed: "We have not heard of any arrest or results of the investigation by Task Force Usig."

The Commission on Human Rights is looking into the killings as well as the case of the Tagaytay 5.

Looking for a trophy

Pinpin, information officer of the Kalipunan ng Magsasaka sa Kabite (Kamagsasaka-ka), offered this theory on why they were not executed:

"They were looking for a trophy to bolster the supposed tie-up between the Left and the Right," he said, speaking through the iron bars of their cell at a holding center in Camp Vicente Lim.

Since February, the Arroyo administration had been harping on the "unholy alliance" of rightist officers and communist rebels as being behind a plot to oust the President.

A graduate of the Don Severino Agriculture College (now Cavite State University), Pinpin is also part of the secretariat of the Cavite Farmers' Consultative Council or the CFCC, which is under the office of Cavite Rep. Crispin Remulla.

Like Pinpin, Custodio, 29, is a member of the Kamagsasaka-ka, while Sarmiento, 48, is a consultant of several farmers' organizations. Ybafiez, 58, is a cockfighting aficionado and Masayes, 28, a breeder of fighting cocks.

Selling farm products

As part of the Fair Trade Alliance, Kamagsasaka-ka works to improve the lot of farmers by marketing their coffee and sugar products in Canada at double their local prices through its partner, Philippine Organic Harvest, among other things.

Sure, Pinpin, Custodio and Sarmiento were progressive agriculturists, and on the night they were rounded up, they had just come from a meeting with farmers in Cavite to mobilize them for the Labor Day rally in Manila.

But Pinpin swore he and his companions were neither NPA guerrillas nor was their group a communist front. "We're not a front, we're a legal and legitimate organization," he said.

The estimated P800,000, which the enforcers seized from their bags and pockets on that fateful night, was raised by the group to buy hogs and cows for the farmers' livestock program, Pinpin said. This and their personal effects were all gone now.

The police also confiscated mobile phones, floppy and flash discs, and receipts for the purchase of ammonium nitrate and 8,000 small ball bearings, supposedly components in the manufacture of improvised bombs.

Witch-hunt

"This is all part of a concerted, conscious, deliberate effort by the state to mount a witch-hunt," said the bespectacled Sarmiento, who denied police claims he was the NPA commander in the province.

"In a way, we're lucky we're alive," he added.

Inside the camp, the Tagaytay 5 sleep side by side on the cold floor of their cramped cell. They are not allowed to go out for sun or exercise. But they have managed to smuggle books inside.

Here, Pinpin, a former University of the Philippines Writers' workshop fellow who has published a collection of poems titled "Tugmaang Walang Tugma," managed to write a verse about their deprivations, "Order ni Sir," which he read aloud to the consternation of the guards.

Of course, he prefers to write poetry at home, beyond the walls of the camp, but then again in these uncertain times, the prospects are not that good.

"If I walk out of here free, definitely I won't be safe," Pinpin tersely said. "Maybe the next time they see me, they'd shoot me down."

aired reports and commentaries that condemned military abuses.

But Lt. Col. Leopoldo Galon Jr., spokesperson of the Army's 5th Infantry Division, said the military had no hand in the incident and described the accusation as "absurd."

"The communists will readily accuse the [Armed Forces of the Philippines] of anything. You have to understand that the AFP is the foremost organization that stands in their way toward gaining political power," said Galon. Villamor Visaya Jr., PDI Northern Luzon Bureau

DON'T TURN A BLIND EYE TO DIABETES. COGENT DB+

High blood glucose levels in diabetics affect the retina's blood vessels, resulting in partial vision loss or total blindness. The nine Ayurvedic medicinal herbs in Cogent db+ help prevent the formation of cataract, a late complication of diabetic retinopathy. Taking Cogent db+, together with your prescribed oral medication, also helps provide the following benefits:

- Lowers elevated blood glucose, triglycerides, and cholesterol levels
- Reduces glycosylated hemoglobin within three months, helping prevent diabetic complications such as diabetic foot gangrene, kidney disease, renal failure, and nerve damage
- Repairs pancreatic tissue damage and enhances tissue response to insulin
- Helps to reverse cell death and hyperglycemia-related tissue damage
- Serves as a powerful anti-oxidant fighting free radicals
- Checks the blockage of blood vessels and helps reverse atherosclerosis
- Helps to alleviate Diabetes-induced impotence and loss of libido in males and sexual dysfunction in females

124 Fil-Ams take up RP citizenship

A TOTAL OF 124 FILIPINO-AMERICANS IN THE states of Oregon and Washington took their oath to become Filipino citizens again under the dual citizenship law during a five-day consular outreach program of the Philippine Consulate General in San Francisco.

The consulate approved 53 applications in Portland, Oregon; 68 in Seattle and three in Wapato in the Yakima Valley in Washington, the Department of Foreign Affairs said in a statement yesterday.

A four-man consular team led by Vice Consul Anthony Mandap conducted the consular outreach program in Portland, Seattle and Wapato from June 14 to 18.

The bulk of the consular services consisted of applications for dual citizenship by Fil-Ams, according to Consul General Maria Rowena Sanchez.

"Demand for these services increased dramatically since November last year, when the requirements for application were relaxed to allow the submission of substitute documents in lieu of a birth certificate authenticated by the National Statistics Office," Sanchez said.

Sanchez said that "for the first time," 79 qualified Filipinos residing in these areas registered as overseas absentee voters—38 in Portland, 32 in Seattle and nine in Wapato.

Wapato is an Indian reservation located more than 100 miles east of Seattle and home to more than a thousand Filipinos, majority of whom trace their roots to the Ilocos region.

Ilocano farm workers migrated to Wapato in the 1920s, the DFA said.

The consular services in Wapato were conducted at the 50-year-old Filipino Community Center, followed by a program where among the topics the embassy representatives discussed were trade and tourism opportunities in the Philippines.

The Filipino community of Yakima Valley organized the event.

"The valley is best known as the source of the world-renowned Washington apples, which Filipino migrant farmhands have helped produce over the decades," the DFA said. Nikko Dixon

Let us not deceive the Filipino people!

Sigaw ng Bayan launched its drive for reform three months ago—on the proposition that our country would be better-off changing its political structure and system of government.

No one has challenged our judgment that the presidential system with a bicameral Congress has failed our people. We have not heard a single strong argument in its defense—given the grinding poverty of our people in many regions, and the destructive political structure presidential government has bred for seven decades. The truth is there is no single argument for this country to continue under a failed and flawed system—other than the senators' individual ambitions to seek the presidency.

Sigaw ng Bayan—backed by ten million citizens and the nationwide network of local governments—offers an alternative political structure we believe can rescue our country from 70 years of false starts and failed prophets.

Sigaw ng Bayan wants our country under a unicameral parliamentary government. Experience in every region around the globe has shown that this system works best in any country under any culture.

Old and new democracies have parliamentary governments

The record shows that most of the emerging democracies in the 20th century have embraced the parliamentary system—because it makes for efficient, open, program-based, and party-based government.

The more than eight million overseas Filipinos who've left this chronically backward country for better opportunities and a higher quality of life abroad—could not have chosen better. They have relocated in countries that are wealthy and have strong social programs and long-term stability because they are run by efficient parliamentary governments. We find large Filipino communities in Singapore, Malaysia, Thailand, Japan and South Korea. They are also in Italy, Spain, England, Germany, Switzerland and Austria. They are in Australia, New Zealand, and Canada.

A system controlled by power brokers is not a genuine democracy

We want to shift the country to a parliamentary system—and a unicameral legislature—to put it on a similar trajectory toward long-term economic progress and political stability.

This would be impossible to achieve—unless we dismantle the chronically negligent Senate, and the present political system that favors only the elite, the power brokers, and big-time financiers who bankroll their own candidates, and then manipulate elections and their results. Anyone who insists that there is genuine democracy under this system is a hypocrite.

Sigaw ng Bayan is the national conscience stirring to life at last. Our goal is to put an end to this chronic misery.

We are not just occasional political and social activists.

We are constitutional warriors speaking for the downtrodden, the marginalized, and the majority who have decided they can no longer continue to suffer in silence.

What we seek to achieve

In seeking amendments to the 1987 Constitution, Sigaw ng Bayan has a clear vision of what it wants to achieve:

- Our people will vote for the leader of the nation and of the Government. Every Member of Parliament—elected by our people in each legislative district—has a fair and equal chance to become Prime Minister—or Cabinet Minister in the Government that shall be directly—and daily—responsible to the people who voted the Government to power.

- We are not about to extend indefinitely the tenure of those already in power. In fact, we are leveling the political playing field. We will synchronize elections every five years—eliminating huge expenditures and election campaigns that cost billions, which only the wealthy few can afford. Without Charter amendments, the elite political dynasties, which the 1987 Charter has not wiped out, will continue to dominate national and local politics.

- The 2007 elections will proceed as scheduled—as already settled by Charter reform proponents, including the House of Representatives, which voted overwhelmingly to stick to the election cycle.

- We are not about to create a powerful Interim Parliament and a super-President with additional powers of a Prime Minister. Under the present Constitution, we already have an extremely powerful President. Under the proposed Charter amendments, we are clipping the powers of the President, part of which shall then be exercised by the Prime Minister. The President—who remains as chief executive—will share her powers with the Prime Minister, who shall run the day-to-day affairs of government as chief operating officer. The President and the Prime Minister are two different persons—not one and the same. The OneVoice movement is totally wrong in making this claim.

- We are not about to weaken the Supreme Court. In fact, it shall remain a bulwark of our democracy.

The new Constitution shall also achieve the following (which the elite have not addressed):

- Eliminate turncoatism—which is the root cause of our negative political culture. Wala nang mga balimbing: no more promiscuous party-switching. Our goal is to restore the primacy of party-based programs so that the dominant political party—when elected to power—shall be responsible for the program of government.

- Create a responsible opposition party in parliament whose members shall fully exercise their role as the best check to the majority party in a parliamentary government.

Unless we change the structure of government—and remove the restrictive economic provisions in the 1987 Charter—the Philippines will remain trapped in a web of destructive political culture, backbiting, fault-finding, and an economy that cannot compete with the best of Asia and the world.

To those who misrepresent our views, we say:

DON'T DECEIVE THE FILIPINO PEOPLE!

YOUR TIME HAS RUN OUT!

THE PEOPLE HAVE RISEN, AND THEIR SOVEREIGN CRY FOR CHANGE RESOUNDS NATIONWIDE!

Recall cases, join us, solons tell impeach proponents

By Michael Lim Ubac

THE ADMINISTRATION CAMP HAS CALLED on the opposition to recall the four impeachment complaints filed last week against President Macapagal-Arroyo and to join a unity government.

But the House minority refused and even challenged Ms Arroyo to a rematch via the impeachment process.

Stop hiding under the skirt of "invented technicalities" and face the issues head on, the opposition said.

The impeachment bid was the "worst publicity" for the country, according to Representatives Exequiel Javier of Antique and Rodito Albano III of Isabela, who had accompanied the President on her Europe trip.

Javier said the impeachment bid was the "handiwork" of former President Joseph Estrada "to satisfy his hunger for vengeance and power."

Albano called on the "opposition to forget their negative politics and join the administration in pushing for propoor and prodevelopment programs."

He said the President was working hard to encourage European businessmen to invest their money in the country.

Working hard

"It's really unfair to the President. Despite all her hard work and sacrifice, the opposition continues to work against her and has maliciously filed a new impeachment bid," Albano said.

Both lawmakers agreed with Trade Secretary Peter Favila that negative reports only served to hurt the country's image abroad.

Javier said the impeachment drive was being used as a campaign tool by senatorial wannabes in the 2007 polls and was part of Estrada's oust-Arroyo plan.

House Deputy Minority Leader Alan Peter Cayetano said he was not surprised by the administration's offer to join a unity government.

"The President has consistently refused to initiate genuine reforms. By buying people—that's how she intends to get out of any problems she [and her allies are] facing," Cayetano said.

He added that it had been a "consistent" administration policy to offer juicy government positions and projects to Ms Arroyo's critics, instead of answering the issues.

"She does not do unto others what she wants others to do unto her. There's one set of rules for Gloria and her allies and another set of rules for the rest of the country," Cayetano said.

Students seek clarification on impeachment

By Alcuin Papa

MILITANT STUDENTS HAS CHALLENGED the Commission on Higher Education (CHED) to endorse seminars that would explain to students and teachers the issues in the new impeachment complaints filed against President Macapagal-Arroyo.

The CHED had earlier agreed to the holding of Charter change seminars in colleges and universities conducted by known Cha-cha advocates, an arrangement deplored by the Kabataan Party.

"If the CHED really wants to enlighten students and educators on national affairs, it should start with issues hounding the Arroyo presidency that fueled the current political and economic crisis," Kabataan Party vice president Carl Marc Ramota said.

Ramota said schools were "the best alternative venues for discourse and social critique in these times when so-called democratic institutions and processes are easily manipulated to conceal the truth."

He said: "The CHED should not allow itself to be used as a machinery for deceit. As education officials, they should put more emphasis on instilling social awareness, responsibility and involvement among the students rather than blindly following orders from higher-ups."

School caravan

The Kabataan Party, the Youth Demanding Arroyo's Removal (Youth DARE) and the youth impeachment watchdog, Impeach Monitor, will hold a nationwide school caravan starting this month to make the public aware of the grounds for the new impeachment complaint against Ms Arroyo.

"The problems of corruption, gross human rights violations and electoral fraud are issues of paramount importance that directly affect each and every Filipino. These are the realities that students ought to know and understand first, rather than the Cha-cha proposal which deceives the public with reforms while seeking to perpetuate the present ruling clique at its practices," Ramota said.

The student leader warned of possible student unrest should the Arroyo administration and its allies in Congress prematurely kill the second impeachment bid.

"While the Arroyo government insists that we should follow the Constitution and observe the rule of law, it is using its own juridical formulas to bend the law and keep the truth from coming out. Such moves further erode the remaining confidence that the public has in our government and Constitutional processes," Ramota said.

He clarified, however, that while they would support the second impeachment bid, they were not pinning their hopes on the process.

Pinay's essay on climate change wins Tokyo honors

By Blanche S. Rivera

AN ENGINEERING PROFESSOR'S ESSAY ON climate change, whipped up in 20 minutes, had its 15 minutes of fame in Japan last week.

Carmela R. Centeno's "No More Decembers" was among the four essays cited for "particular excellence" during the 14th Eco-Asia Congress in Tokyo last week, besting more than 40 entries of university and post-graduate students from 16 other countries.

Centeno, an associate professor in the engineering department of the University of Santo Tomas, wrote about the experience of global warming in the Philippines.

"When I was young, I waited in eager anticipation for the coming of December. You see, coming from the Philippines where no snow kisses the trees in winter, I used to bask in the cold weather of the holiday season," she said in her two-page essay.

"I remembered the simple joy of going to school in my new jacket. Then there were Decembers no more," she lamented, detailing the Kyoto Protocol and the Philippine government's dismal efforts at combatting climate change.

Centeno, who is attending a research course on water and the environment at the Tokyo Institute for Technology under a Unesco program, was pleasantly surprised that she won.

"Modesty aside, in 20 minutes, I was done with the essay. I thought I had nothing to lose ... [but] I didn't think it was worth any award so I was surprised when they called me," she told the INQUIRER yesterday in a phone interview.

Compared to the technical essays of the other participants, Centeno wrote simply—like she was talking to her students.

"I always tell my students 'you know when we were younger, we would go to school wearing jackets.' But kids don't experience that anymore ... So the thought was there even before I started writing," she said.

The Environment Congress for Asia and the Pacific (Eco-Asia), a ministerial level congress on environmental issues in Asia and the Pacific region organized by Japan's Ministry of Environment, launched an essay-writing contest last March on the mitigating measures employed by member-countries to combat global warming. It was open to all foreign students studying in Japan.

13th Week in Ordinary Time
Thomas Apostle

1st Reading: Eph 2:19-22
Gospel: John 20:24-29

Thomas, the Twin, one of the Twelve, was not with them when Jesus came. The other disciples told him, "We have seen the Lord." But he replied, "Until I have seen in his hands the print of the nails, and put my finger in the mark of the nails and my hand in his side, I will not believe."

Eight days later, the disciples were inside again and Thomas was with them. Despite the locked doors Jesus came and stood in their midst and said, "Peace be with you." Then he said to Thomas, "Put your finger here and see my hands; stretch out your hand and put it in my side. Resist no longer and be a believer."

Thomas then said, "You are my Lord and my God." Jesus replied, "You believe because you see me, don't you? Happy are those who have not seen and believe."

Commentary

In Jesus we are no longer strangers or aliens but citizens of God's household and saints. We are the foundation of hope in the world, the dwelling place of God. And Jesus calls us all to show forth to the world his presence-crucified and risen. And unlike Thomas we are to listen to one another's accounts of the resurrection so that we do not stifle the work of the Spirit in the world and make the Risen Lord return to call us to task for our personal lack of belief and demands. We are blessed because we believe and have not seen.

plants, cucumbers or bananas for a lesson on condom use.

Rañada said she was familiar with the modules, having been a participant in the workshop on the "development of an enriched curriculum in population education for all levels" from Jan. 15 to Feb. 3, 1996.

She said she had been personally "trained" on how to put condoms on, say, eggplants when she attended a seminar on AIDS Education Modules Revision at the Imus Sports Complex in Cavite in 1994.

"The idea then was to teach teachers so they could train their students on condom use later," she said.

"The goal of the program was initially to integrate sex education in the curriculum and it has succeeded," she said. "Now, the plan is to institutionalize it with this new batch of modules."

Skirting issue

Rañada said DepEd officials were skirting the issue by claiming that the new batch of modules contained no questionable lessons.

"But how about the ones that came before them and which are still in use in our schools today?" she asked.

Rañada showed the INQUIRER copies of some of the books, such as "Resource Manual on the Growing Filipino Adolescent: A Guidance Program for Adolescent Development for High School Students (Fourth Year Series)."

Page 31 of the book asks if "too much sex (is) physically harmful."

The answer: "No, because there is no such thing as too much sex. Generally speaking and under normal circumstances, sexual intercourse and masturbation are self-limiting. When one has had enough, and this level varies from person to person, one will stop."

Rañada said such a lesson was devoid of the moral aspect of the sexual act and appeared to encourage it among high school students.

The education department is willing to revise a controversial lesson plan for sex education in public schools, DepEd officer in charge Fe Hidalgo said yesterday.

Earlier, Dr. Angelita Aguirre, head of the pro-life Human Life International, objected to the lesson plan because it omitted the fact that condom use did not ensure full protection from sexually transmitted diseases.

She said parents and not teachers should be responsible for teaching their youngsters about sex.

The complaint prompted the department to temporarily withdraw the lesson plans, which had been distributed to two pilot schools in Metro Manila—the Parañaque High School and Pateros National High School.

Open to suggestions

At the meeting, the two sides are expected to iron out their differences even as the DepEd had said it was determined to distribute the lesson plans to the public schools.

"We are open to suggestions. If it will help to better promote and teach proper reproductive health among today's youth, we are open to it. And also to free the topic from any negative connotations," Hidalgo said.

She acknowledged that discussions about the use of contraceptives were indeed part of the lesson plan on "value safe sex education."

But Hidalgo said the DepEd would listen to suggestions from the CBCP on how to discuss the use of contraceptives among students and take into consideration the fact that the Philippines is a predominantly Catholic country.

Reproductive health

Hidalgo said the DepEd preferred to use the term "adolescent reproductive health" (ARH) over "sex education" in the module.

The DepEd will also incorporate population education concepts into subjects like Health, English, Science, Filipino, Technology and Livelihood Education, and Araling Panlipunan.

Hidalgo said the inclusion of the ARH in these subjects was aimed at educating young adults on their "physical, mental and social well-being."

"The reproductive health needs of this group should be based on information that helps them attain a level of maturity required to make responsible decisions," she said.

The subject, Hidalgo explained, would be taught in English to save teachers the trouble of using Filipino words, which may be offensive to teachers and students.

Premarital sex

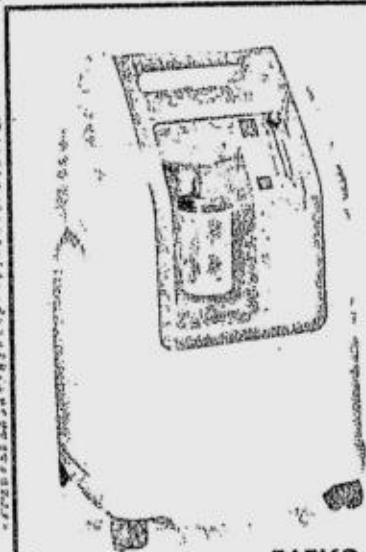

Earlier, Hidalgo denied that the DepEd was promoting premarital sex by discussing the use of condoms and other contraceptives.

"We are not tolerating premarital sex. We do not even encourage this. What we are doing is telling them the consequences of such acts and what should be done. We are more suggestive in tone," she said.

Hidalgo also noted a survey which found that a growing number of youngsters were engaging in premarital sex. This was one reason the department had taken steps to inform students about issues related to sex.

The Young Adult Fertility Survey III by the University of the Philippines Population Institute found that in 2003, 23 percent of adolescents, aged 15 to 24 years old, already had sex, up from 18 percent in 1994.

The survey also found that overall risky sexual behavior increased from 20 percent in 1994 to 27 percent in 2002.

No incisions. No stitches. No scars.

Just permanent, growing, all-natural hair

Had enough of covering up your thinning hair? Now you don't have to. Nu/Hart, a world leader in hair transplantation, brings to the Philippines a revolutionary new technique called "Neografting," a simple, in-office procedure that restores your natural hairline permanently.

Also called Follicular Unit Extraction (FUE), Neografting is different from conventional hair transplants. It involves extracting follicular units individually from the donor area and immediately transplanting them to the thinning and balding area. Hair from the donor area is genetically programmed to grow for the rest of your life! Plus, because there are no incisions, there are never any stitches, bandages, or scars. And no on-going maintenance is necessary.

MESSAGE

Esteemed greetings to the officers and members of the Pharmaceutical and Healthcare Association of the Philippines (PHAP) as you celebrate your 60th Anniversary.

For the past six decades, you have served the healthcare needs of the Filipino people, while maintaining at the same time the viability of the pharmaceutical industry. I salute your organization for providing quality medicines and life-saving innovations for our people, especially the less fortunate and underprivileged sector of our society.

I urge you to continue to be an active partner of the government in enhancing the longevity and quality of life of our people. It is only through unity, cooperation, altruism and love of others that we can build the foundations of a healthier and stronger Philippines.

Again, happy 60th anniversary to all of you. Mabuhay kayong lahat!

MESSAGE

Warmest greetings to the officers and members of the Pharmaceutical and Healthcare Association of the Philippines (PHAP) as they celebrate their 60th Year Anniversary.

PHAP has been one of the major healthcare partners of the government in providing quality medicines that have significantly improved the quality of life of Filipinos.

I exhort you to continue your essential contribution and valuable mission of maintaining the viability of the pharmaceutical industry to better serve our people.

Let us be one in focusing our objectives in attaining our goal of a healthy and progressive country for all Filipinos.

Congratulations and mabuhay kayong lahat!

MESSAGE

I warmly congratulate the officers and members of the Pharmaceutical and Healthcare Association of the Philippines (PHAP) on the occasion of its 60th anniversary on 03 July 2006.

Indeed, you have come a long way. Your Association is already an institution in the pharmaceutical industry. I wish to extend my sincere appreciation to all your members, who have always been a vital partner of the Bureau of Food and Drugs (BFAD), in our mutual desire to ensure the provision of safe, efficacious and good quality pharmaceutical products.

The outstanding achievements of your members by continuously providing quality medicines and by ensuring that the greater public has access to life-saving medicines and everyday cures, have contributed significantly to the upliftment of the quality of life of Filipinos.

Let us continue to work together as partners! Again, congratulations!

Industry Highlights

■ Research-based industry. The Pharmaceutical and Healthcare Association of the Philippines (PHAP) and its 63 member companies represent the research-based pharmaceutical and healthcare industry, a key sector in the never-ending fight for improved health through the continuous development of new, better, more efficacious and cost-effective drug therapies. In the 20th and the 21st centuries, the world has seen remarkable medical advances, including cures for some of the most feared diseases. Many of these advances – such as defeating polio, smallpox and measles, and significant progress in the treatment of hypertension, high cholesterol, diabetes and other conditions – have been due to the discoveries of new therapies.

■ Innovative, life-saving medicines. These new therapies include revolutionary, life-saving medicines that define the cutting edge of medical science, and bring economic and social benefits to populations in both developed and developing countries. Innovative medicines and treatments save lives, give new hope for the future, and give patients and doctors more options in healthcare. These therapies can help control overall health spending by helping patients stay healthier and avoid costly hospitalizations that may involve surgery.

■ The role of R & D. Research and development (R & D) that results in new therapies involves considerable costs. In the United States, research-based pharmaceutical companies spent US$ 39.4 Billion for R & D in 2005 alone. Only one of every 10,000 potential new drugs investigated by America's research-based pharmaceutical companies makes it through the research and development pipeline and is approved for patient use by the U.S. Food and Drug Administration. On average, obtaining regulatory approval for a new drug takes 15 years of R & D and costs over $800 million dollars.

■ Value of new drugs. The value of new and better medicines derives not only from the improved treatment of disease, but also from a reduction in other health care costs, increased productivity and better quality of life.

■ Providing the bulk of the country's medicines. PHAP member companies provide the bulk of the country's pharmaceuticals, nutritionals, large-volume parenterals and medical devices. At least count, the PHAP membership accounted for over 70% of sales to drugstores and hospital pharmacies, and over 85% of industry sales at the distribution level.

■ Industry competition. Competition in the pharmaceutical and healthcare industry – indeed among PHAP Member Companies – is vigorous, since there are various drugs available in every therapeutic class. Apart from competing with generic drugs, new medicines also compete against each other. The competition has increased, with the duration in which a new medicine is on the market decreasing before another competing medicine in the same therapeutic class is

PHAP President's Message

The 60th Anniversary of the Pharmaceutical and Healthcare Association of the Philippines (PHAP) is a testament to the crucial and necessary role of the sector it represents, one which enables access for Filipinos to high-quality, innovation-based therapies that save lives and safeguard health, that over the years have played a significant part in combating the leading causes of mortality and morbidity in the country, while helping to enhance average life expectancies and improve quality of life.

Pharmaceutical and healthcare companies have a unique character, since even while they must ensure their success as businesses in order to survive, the nature of their products and services often makes the difference between life or death and illness or well-being, with economic and social implications that subject them to constant scrutiny from consumers, media, regulatory authorities, legislators and other interest groups.

Given such an environment, the industry in the Philippines, as well as all over the world, has realized over the years that complex issues and problems of healthcare involving entire populations can only be addressed effectively through concerted and equitable efforts by all stakeholders that recognize realities and the legitimate interests of all concerned.

Therefore, on the occasion of the PHAP's Diamond Anniversary, on behalf of our Member Companies, we reaffirm our strong commitment to continuing cooperation and dialogue with all our partners in the public and private sectors, as we pursue the goal of delivering the best quality of healthcare possible to all Filipinos.

introduced. The competition is beneficial to patients, since not every patient responds to every drug in the same way. The availability of different drugs in every therapeutic class, especially new medicines, provides better treatment choices for individual patients, lowers risks of complications, improves patient compliance with treatment, and develops greater competition.

■ Global affiliations. The PHAP is the only member in the country of the International Federation of Pharmaceutical Manufacturers & Associations (IFPMA) and the World Self-Medication Industry (WSMI). The IFPMA is a non-profit, non-governmental organization (NGO) representing industry associations in both developed and developing countries; IFPMA member companies are the major global research-based pharmaceutical and vaccine companies. The World Self-Medication Industry (WSMI) is a global federation of associations representing manufacturers and distributors of non-prescription medicines, which seeks to promote better health through responsible self-medication. The IFPMA and the WSMI are NGOs in official relations with the World Health Organization.

■ Belief in partnership for healthcare. The PHAP is committed to working in partnership with both the public and the private sectors to improve access to quality healthcare, particularly medicines, for all Filipinos.

■ Access to quality medicines. Pharmaceutical access is defined as the timely availability, subject to economic and physical conditions, of quality medicines to those patients who need them. A host of interrelated factors determine the level of access to quality medicines, such as the availability of financial resources, government policies, infrastructure conditions, private and public sector insurance programs, appropriate use, supply management and manufacturing capacity.

■ Multi-sectoral cooperation in addressing healthcare issues. Experience worldwide has shown that multi-stakeholder initiatives have proven to be the most efficient and effective way of improving health status with regard to the problem of access to quality medicines, particularly where there is significant poverty incidence. The costs of healthcare are a priority concern to policy makers, the pharmaceutical and healthcare industry, healthcare professionals and providers, and not the least, consumers. The PHAP and its Member Companies welcome multi-sectoral cooperation in addressing such healthcare issues. Only through rational analysis based on facts taken in proper context, as well as healthy and open debate, can workable solutions be developed to benefit Filipinos.

Over The Years

The origins of the Pharmaceutical and Healthcare Association of the Philippines (PHAP) date back to July 3, 1946. On that day a group of 10 men, each representing a leading pharmaceutical wholesaler in the country, established the Philippine Wholesale Druggist Association.

The Association's founders were John Magda of the Philippine American Drug Company (Boie), who had invited nine colleagues to meet at his office in San Vicente, Manila; Elias Picker of Oceanic Commercial; Ciriaco A. Santiago of Hermoso Drug Store; Armando L. Vellila of Marsman and Company; Horacio Guanzon of Farmacia Oro; Leon Dolor of Dolor's Pharmacy; Yu Siu Tek of Yucunseh Drug Company; Jose Teehankee, Jr. of Farmacia Central; William Ty of Farmacia Oriental; and Manuel Galatas of Metro Drug Corporation.

On July 27, 1950, during a meeting at the Squibb Building then located in Intramuros, the organization was renamed the Drug Association of the Philippines, by which it was to be known for the next 40 years. Membership in the non-stock, non-profit association was expanded to include pharmaceutical manufacturers.

Early in 1991, the organization's name was changed to the Pharmaceutical and Healthcare Association of the Philippines (PHAP) to signify a wider representation of pharmaceutical and related healthcare companies.

From its post-war beginnings as a sector engaged in wholesale and importation of finished products, the country's pharmaceutical industry as represented by the PHAP has evolved into one with an important role in the economy, in society and in the healthcare community in particular.

The growth of the PHAP over sixty years has reflected the development of the pharmaceutical industry in the Philippines, a sector which is a pillar of healthcare for Filipinos.

Reaching Out to Those in Need

On July 10, 2003, the Pharmaceutical and Healthcare Association of the Philippines launched its social outreach arm, the PHAPCares Foundation, Inc. The launch was highlighted by a "Pledge of Donation" signifying the commitment of PHAPCares to donate P100 million worth of essential medicines annually to the Department of Health (DOH), for distribution to indigent patients through 72 hospitals nationwide, free of charge.

Under a protocol, PHAPCares courses all product donations from PHAP Member Companies through the DOH Program Secretariat. Upon receipt of donated stocks, the DOH Secretariat then implements an allocation system based on the actual requirements of DOH-retained hospitals in various parts of the country.

PHAPCares has been recognized as a "donee institution" by the Philippine Council for NGO Certification (PCNC), an umbrella organization of several NGO networks designated by the Department of Finance as the accrediting entity to determine the qualification of NGOs to avail of tax incentives.

The establishment of PHAPCares marks the first time in the country that an association of multinational and local pharmaceutical and healthcare companies has formed a service-oriented, non-profit foundation to partner with the public sector and other NGOs in improving access to quality essential medicines.

Even prior to establishing PHAPCares, the PHAP has continuously engaged in various outreach programs to benefit the disadvantaged, such as providing financial support to doctors in rural areas where no medical care previously existed, supporting the government's anti-polio and anti-measles vaccination programs over the years, and providing free medicines in times of calamity.

The PHAPCares staff is headed by Executive Director Glecyc Cuenco.

Masinloc bidder loses $14-M bond

By Abigail L. Ho

THE $14-MILLION PERFORMANCE bond posted by winning bidder YNN Pacific Consortium Inc. for the 600-megawatt (MW) Masinloc coal-fired power plant in Zambales was finally forfeited in favor of the Power Sector Assets and Liabilities Management Corp. (Psalm) after the consortium failed to remit the $227-million down payment for the plant on June 30.

Psalm, the government agency tasked with privatizing the assets of the National Power Corp. had thrice extended the deadline for YNN to pay the 40-percent down payment for its $561.7-million winning bid for the Masinloc plant.

The consortium won the bid to buy the plant in December 2004.

The original deadline to remit the $227 million to Psalm was on Dec. 2, 2005. Psalm later moved the deadline to March 31 and then to June 30.

Psalm had extended the deadline on condition that YNN increased its performance bond to $14 million from the original $11 million.

The deadline was pushed back to June 30 to allow the entry of a new investor, Malaysian conglomerate Ranthill Bhd, into YNN.

But on Friday, Psalm decided not to grant another extension to YNN.

Psalm said the forfeiture of the performance bond meant that the Masinloc plant would be "re-bid at the appropriate time if conditions warrant."

In a statement, Energy Secretary Raphael Lotilla said that Psalm could have just forfeited YNN's $11-million performance bond last March 31.

However, after assessing the situation, the Psalm board concluded that YNN's $561.7-million winning bid would be hard to match should the Masinloc plant be placed on the auction block again, he said.

He noted that the only other bidder, First Generation Corp., submitted a bid of only $274.85 million, less than half YNN's bid and 30 percent lower than Psalm's reserve price of $388 million.

Psalm pointed out that the government actually gained from giving YNN a three-month deadline extension as this involved a higher performance bond of $14 million.

"The increase of the bid bond by an additional $3 million as a result of the board decision to wait three more months increased the collectable amount to 27 percent, a yield that any financial analyst would assess as a good yield over the short period of three months," Psalm said.

Psalm earlier drew flak from various sectors, including legislators and militant groups, after extending YNN's deadline instead of immediately forfeiting the $11-million performance bond when it failed to meet the first two deadlines. With TJ Burgonio

DIGOS CITY—FORMER Manila Rep. Mark Jimenez is at it again.

After donating P50 million to planholders of Pacific Plans and doling out cash to Ilocos Sur residents during the birthday of Gov. Luis "Chavit" Singson, Jimenez went to Mindanao to do the same.

On Friday, he distributed cash and groceries to at least 7,500 families here.

The distribution was overseen by Rep. Claude Bautista of the second district of Davao del Sur and his brother, Gov. Benjamin Bautista Jr.

Jimenez and the Bautistas are allies.

Representative Bautista said those who received cash and groceries, totaling P3 million, were families affected by the recent floods in Davao del Sur.

But he clarified that not all of the affected families received cash. He said others only got groceries.

"Only those whose houses were swept away by the floods got P10,000 each," Bautista said.

Reports from the city disaster coordinating council said seven houses were swept away by floods that hit the city two weeks ago. No casualties were reported.

Bautista said there was no politics behind Jimenez's "assistance."

He said the former Manila solon was only responding to a request by his brother following Mayor Arsenio Latasa's appeal for assistance in the wake of the floods.

"Upon learning what happened, Jimenez told us to prepare a massive relief assistance distribution at the soonest possible time," Bautista said.

'Merceditas Rules'

LIKE A SCHOOLBOY SLIPPING HIS HOMEWORK under the teacher's door a few minutes before deadline, the Office of the Ombudsman last Friday finally complied with a Supreme Court directive to determine the criminal liability of officials and private citizens involved in the anomalous Mega Pacific election automation contract. The findings by the anti-graft agency came two and a half years after the high court voided the Commission on Elections contract and issued its directive.

EDITORIAL

Were they worth the wait?

On June 30, the final deadline the court set for Ombudsman Merceditas Gutierrez to reach her conclusions, the Office of the Ombudsman issued a resolution "which contained [according to the agency's press statement] factual findings that can be used by the House of Representatives to initiate impeachment proceedings against Comelec Commissioner Resurreccion Borra."

The Ombudsman also ordered the dismissal of the five members of the Comelec Bids and Awards Committee which qualified the winning but ineligible bidder, Mega Pacific Consortium; prepared the filing of charges against the committee members before the Sandiganbayan; and recommended the filing of criminal charges against the eight incorporators of the consortium.

Speaking through Acting Overall Deputy Ombudsman Orlando Casimiro, the Ombudsman's office explained that Borra, once executive director of the Comelec before being appointed as one of seven commissioners, was liable "for allowing the Comelec's Bids and Awards Committee to declare Mega-Pacific Consortium eligible to participate in the bidding process for the project, for allowing the material deviation from the bidding requirements, and for recommending to the BAC that the award be given to the MPC despite its ineligibility and technical failure."

The controversial contract awarding the project to Mega Pacific was approved by the Comelec itself on April 15, 2003, and signed by Chair Benjamin Abalos, Borra, Florentino Tuason Jr. and four other commissioners who are now retired: Luzviminda Tancangco, Rufino Javier, Ralph Lantion and Mehol Sadain.

But Gutierrez said further investigation was needed to determine the liability of the other commissioners. "We are still [at the] fact-finding level with regards to the other commissioners. We want to do a thorough investigation in order not to commit injustice."

Curiously, however, the latest (and belated) resolution offered a suddenly narrow view of the Ombudsman's constitutional mandate. Casimiro said the Ombudsman was referring Borra's case to Congress, because the anti-graft agency had no jurisdiction over impeachable officials like Borra. "We are placing him at the disposal of the House of Representatives," Casimiro said.

This new legal principle deserves its own name, so let's call it the first Merceditas Rule. Contrary to what is expressly stated in the Constitution (in Article XI) and elaborated on in RA 6770 (the "Ombudsman Act of 1989"), the first Merceditas Rule declares all impeachable officials—that is, public officials who can be removed from office only through impeachment—off limits, or out of reach of the Ombudsman's long arm.

In the Constitution's listing of the Ombudsman's "powers, functions and duties," the scope of responsibility covers "any act or omission of any public official when such act or omission appears to be illegal, unjust, improper, or inefficient." The inclusive language is repeated in RA 6770; nothing in the Constitution or the statute prevents the Ombudsman from acting against impeachable officials. After all, the privilege of impeachment does not grant a high official immunity against the Ombudsman's work.

But the first Merceditas Rule says otherwise, and it has an important corollary: The Ombudsman will necessarily consider other impeachable officials—such as, say, the President—inoculated against the Ombudsman too.

The second Merceditas Rule places a ceiling on public officials' criminal liability; apparently for the Ombudsman, liability rises to a level of innocuousness. In the Mega Pacific case, the bidding committee is completely liable; the commissioner in charge of the project is partly liable; but the commissioners who approved the bid and awarded the anomalous contract? Not at all liable.

Like the first, the second rule also has a crucial corollary: Public officials more senior than the commissioners—such as, say, the President—can never, ever be liable.

Provide Pinoys with jobs at home, not abroad

WHEN PRESIDENT MACAPAGAL-ARROYO and her party of junketeers return from Spain, one of the "achievements" they will claim is the availability of "100,000 jobs" for Filipinos in that country. Big deal! Those jobs are for caregivers who will take care of old people.

A "caregiver," if you still don't know, is the polite word for people whose job is to wipe the behinds of people too old to do it themselves; bathe them, oftentimes in their beds; feed them and clean up the mess afterwards. Spaniards and people of other Western, "progressive" and rich countries don't want to do this disagreeable job, which is—no matter how you try to "deodorize" it—the most menial, the most humiliating job of all. It is lower even than a laborer's or servant's job. So there are no takers for this job there. So Western countries import "caregivers" from dirt-poor countries like the Philippines to do the job for them. That is why there are many openings for caregivers in these countries.

Unlike here in the Philippines, where family members take care of their old people at home until they die, families in Western nations dump their senior citizens in nursing homes, to be cared for by caregivers—in most cases, poor foreigners—who have no attachment at all to their "patients." There are many such nursing homes in Western "modern" countries because the proportion of their senior citizens to their young ones is increasing.

Nursing homes are depressing places. In there, you see mostly catatonic, infirm, old people ready to keel over and croak. Every morning, the corpses of those who died during the night are carried out.

Nursing homes try to make life cheerful for their wards. This they do by holding parties and dances and games, but the old people know that their days are numbered. They are only waiting for their time to go. This depressing atmosphere affects the caregivers and in due time they become emotional wrecks themselves.

Few people are willing to become caregivers,

AS I SEE IT

Neal H. Cruz

but for poor people, like many Filipinos who cannot find other employment, a caregiver's job is a lifeline for their families. That is why caregivers come only from the poorest of the poor countries; they are people who are forced to accept the job because there is no other job available for them. "Kapit sa patalim" (clinging on to a sharp knife), as we say in Filipino.

Why am I saying all these? Because I am sure GMA and her spinmeisters will boast that by visiting Spain, she was able to generate 100,000 jobs for Filipinos. I just want to inform Filipinos what kind of jobs these are. In due time, we will be known all over the world not only as a nation of domestics, laborers and prostitutes but also as a nation of caregivers or, as the more unkind foreigners label it, "ass-wipers."

Why have we sunk this low, a nation of heroes and freedom-lovers reduced to "wiping other people's behinds"? Because our government is so incompetent and corrupt it cannot provide jobs for its countrymen here at home. So Filipinos are forced to seek jobs in other countries, lest their families starve.

The Philippine economy is kept afloat only by the earnings sent home by these overseas Filipino workers. Without them, our foreign currency reserves would disappear because public officials and rich businessmen, who fatten themselves on the sweat and tears of poor Filipinos, squander foreign exchange on junkets—such as the one the GMA party just embarked on. (Imagine how many millions of pesos in taxes have just been spent for the junket to the Vatican and Spain. How many hungry Filipinos would that money have fed?)

Give unto Caesar

Conrado de Quiros

actually asked her to oppose Erap, which was the one thing that convinced her to move her ass long after the rest of the nation had done so. Unfortunately, the Pope was already laid out in marble when she said this and could not very well say, "But Madame, I couldn't have done that because it doesn't just violate the doctrine of the separation of Church and State, it violates the doctrine of non-intervention by one country in the internal affairs of another."

Who was it who kept portraying herself as Jaime Cardinal Sin's—and Cory's—anoointed when this country was fighting Erap, appearing in prayerful poses with them to show God was on her side? Who was it who suggested that Manny Pacquiao won his fight against Erik Morales because she asked God to make that balato for her? Who was it who said God put her where she was, and not a Visayan-accented, slick-haired, monstrosity who would turn into dust like a vampire exposed to sunlight if he ever spoke a word of truth? Who is it who keeps saying she is in constant chat with her Kumpare in heaven?

But the gall goes further. The justice department will look into the laws of heaven and earth that Bishop Iniguez violated when he moved to impeach GMA? What about the laws of heaven and earth that GMA violated when she called up one Virgilio Garcillano again and again to make sure that she won over Fernando Poe Jr. by one million votes? What about the canons of God and man that GMA violated when she agreed to Garcillano experimenting on ways to "make pagpapataas sa inyo," which had nothing to do with hormonal pills to induce height? What about the strictures of democracy and plain, basic, human—the last being a concept that has been banished from Filipino workers dying for foreign employers in Iraq, Afghanistan and elsewhere; they are beheaded in Saudi Arabia and other Arab countries, they fall from high-rise apartments in Singapore, they are raped by their employers in chauvinistic countries. That is because there are no jobs in their home country and they are forced to leave their families at home to earn a living in foreign shores.

GMA should provide jobs for her countrymen here at home instead of sending them away to take on humiliating jobs in other countries, and then living it up on the earnings they send home.

It looks like the position of PNP chief, which will be vacated when Director General Arturo Lomibao retires next week, is a toss-up between Deputy Director General Oscar Calderon, deputy chief for administration, and Director Servando Hizon, chief of the directorate for comptrollership, which means he knows where the money of the PNP has gone and is going. Although he only has two stars, Hizon has the edge, according to insiders at Camp Crame. But Calderon is not only the second highest ranking officer at the PNP, he also is a relative of GMA. The third contender, Deputy Director General Avelino Razon Jr., deputy chief for operations, is the third ranking officer but he is one year junior to the two others at the Philippine Military Academy. So he still has one year before retirement.

The important issue in the fight for PNP chief is whether the President will continue her revolving-door policy, wherein senior officers with only a few months left before retirement are appointed to the top position, only to be replaced a few months later by another officer with a similarly short term left. With this policy, the PNP chief has no time to plan and make improvements in the police force. He has barely warmed his seat when his time to retire comes. No wonder the PNP is in such a sorry state.

this country—decency that GMA violated when she worried about a teacher in Tipo-Tipo complaining about cheating, and Garcillano replied that even then they were working to kidnap her or hold her family hostage to shut her up?

Let's be stricter about the separation of Church and State? Let's be stricter about the separation of idiosyncrasy and common sense? Is it possible we can act as though the "Hello Garci" tape does not exist? Is it possible we can act that the crimes committed there can be excused as "lapse in judgment"? Is it possible that we can actually believe that we can continue to exist as a genuine democracy, a genuine nation, and a genuinely freedom-loving people having a fake President?

True, that tape was illegally gotten. But all that means is that it cannot be used as evidence to jail GMA for it. It does not mean we cannot use it as basis to prevent her from holding public office, let alone the highest one in the country, and to keep her under tight watch. You cannot use an illegally gotten tape on someone plotting to bomb schools and churches in Metro Manila to jail him. But you, sure as hell, can use that as a basis to keep him as far away from heading the anti-terrorism campaign as possible. Never mind the separation between Church and State, just mind the separation between sanity and madness.

In fact, if I were to find any beef, legal or moral, with Iniguez and the other citizens who want to impeach GMA, it is precisely that they want to impeach her rather than just oust her. To impeach someone is to assume he or she is the rightful President, or holder of an impeachable office. That dubious honor belongs to Erap, who was at least an unarguably, unassailably and ineluctably elected President of this country, albeit one who equally unarguably, unassailably and ineluctably betrayed the public trust. You do not impeach an impostor; you just remove her.

Give unto Caesar what is Caesar's, and to God what is God's. But to those who are neither, just give them the door.

Roadblocks to impeachment

SOUNDING BOARD

Fr. Joaquin G. Bernas, S.J.

IMPEACHMENT IS ONCE AGAIN VERY MUCH IN the air. There has even formed a beeline of impeachment complaint filers arranged in chronological order. Meanwhile, the administration defenders are as confident as ever that impeachment will not succeed. There is basis for this confidence. The roadblocks to impeachment cannot all be ignored.

The least of these roadblocks, which perhaps should be characterized simply as a "hump" on the road, is the theory that no impeachment may be initiated while another one remains unfinished. The argument is: since the opposition filed a motion asking the Supreme Court to cause last year's complaint to be sent back to the Justice Committee, that complaint, while unresolved, prevents the House from entertaining any new complaint.

Strangely, the argument is based on the provision which says "No impeachment proceedings shall be initiated against the same official more than once within a period of one year."

My simple mind simply reads (it does not try to amend) what the provision says. After all, not only do I not have the power to amend it, I do not even have the power to propose an amendment to it. I am neither the Constitutional Convention nor Congress.

The provision speaks of a one-year limitation to initiating or simply starting a new proceeding. The law simply affords the official a breathing space of one year—not an indefinite shield against impeachment—before being assailed with additional problems.

One year, I learned in Law School, is 365 days. Hence, once 365 days have passed—or 366 days if it's a leap year—the prohibition no longer holds. The law does not say: "No impeachment proceedings shall be initiated against the same official for as long as a first impeachment is not yet finally terminated." That is an unauthorized amendment.

But, as I said, the theory is just a "hump" on the road which can be ignored. Let's talk about real roadblocks instead.

The main roadblock, of course, is the target number of 79 House endorsers. That number does not seem to be anywhere in sight. Last year, when the impeachment noise was much louder, the pro-impeachment groups could gather only 51. Now, however, even the headlines do not seem to be loud at all. The biggest ripple yet was made by Bishop Deogracias Iñiguez, and I disagree with those who say that a bishop has no business exercising his right as a citizen. That seems to be the theory coming from Malacañang. One wonders more and more what Constitution Malacañang reads. One would think that after having been roundly rebuked by the Supreme Court three times, the think tank and the voice of Malacañang would look into the appropriate Constitution.

At any rate, I doubt very much that even 10 more Bishop Iñiguezes will be able to help muster the needed 79. This brings me to a stronger roadblock.

I believe that the difficulty of getting the desired 79 is ultimately rooted in the nature of the impeachment process. A couple of nights ago, I was watching a talk show where the host asked the guests whether they believed that the President was guilty of impeachable offenses. Most said she was, and they could very well be right. But the nature of an impeachment process is such that guilt is not the only decisive factor.

The impeachment process is not a judicial process but a political process. Its purpose is not to punish a malefactor but to protect the public from harm.

When I say that impeachment is a political process, I mean that it is political in at least two senses:

First, it is political in the sense that political partisanship is very much a part of the process. In fact, some would say that historically the outcome of all impeachment attempts, whether in the United States or in the Philippines, has been dictated by partisan bias. Each legislator has an interest, legitimate or not, to protect. This is a sad part about impeachment.

Second, impeachment is political in the sense that what is involved is not just a legal decision but also a policy decision. For that reason, the responsibility for impeachment has been given to a political (read: "policy-making") body. When congressmen and congresswomen deliberate on whether to raise the complaint to the Senate, or when the senators deliberate on what verdict to support, the question they answer is not only whether there is evidence to support a "guilty" verdict, but also whether under the circumstances the preferred policy should be to remove the official on trial to allow someone else in. In other words, a verdict of "not guilty" does not necessarily mean "innocent." It can also mean "guilty," but keeping the person in is the wiser option now. What is often decisive is the legitimate gut feel or illegitimate interest of individual legislators.

Is there a textual foundation for such a position? I believe there is. The Constitution says that the "President... may be removed from office on impeachment for, and conviction of, culpable violation of the Constitution, treason, bribery, graft and corruption, other high crimes, or betrayal of public trust." The language is permissive—"may be removed." As crafted, the provision is both a guarantee of security of tenure—the Constitution makes it difficult for the President to be removed—and, at the same time, a means of safeguarding public welfare.

This is how I see the system. It is not judicial. Therefore, if you are not happy with the outcome, your remedy cannot come from the courts. Not even from the Supreme Court. The question is one whose resolution has been textually committed by the Constitution to a political body.

RP-US friendship: another look

COMMENTARY

Natalia M.L.M. Morales

WITH THE UNRELENTING MEDIA COVERAGE of the Subic rape case against four American Marines, Filipino-American ties seem to be at a low ebb again. The case, focusing on the alleged violation of the rights of "Nicole," the Filipina victim, has resulted in a public outrage that has not been mollified by the trial itself.

The accused dutifully follow due process. In their barongs and casual shirts, they look dignified, quashing that image of the "beasts and bullies" who forced themselves on a hapless Filipina.

There is an allegory to their story at the level of US-Philippine relations—a tale of imposition and inevitable surrender where the strong overpowers the weak. The sad thing is, the tale starts from presumed friendship and mutual interest as first base. How ironic that the trial smacks right into the celebration of the Philippine-American Friendship Day on July 4.

The change of date of our Independence Day signaled a more autonomous RP foreign policy and a collective national memory-ordering. The end of the US military bases in 1991, the scale-down of US military engagement to visiting forces, and the anti-terrorist cooperation manifest most of the nuances of the RP-US "special ties"—the ones that bind and separate, unite and disband at the same time.

The truth is Philippine-American friendship has, from the start, been fraught with irony and enigma. The enigma of America when it fought Spain for the victory and freedom of colonized peoples, only for the latter to fall into America's fledgling expansionist vision. The irony for the Philippines, America's former and only colony, which constantly ends up at the losing end of war reparations, parity rights, military bases arrangements and foreign aid, among others. And now a lopsided Visiting Forces Agreement that defines rights and privileges for US servicemen but non-committal on parallel terms for Filipino military officers.

This, however, does not affect the unending romance of Filipinos wanting to unite with America, if not officially, then by their individual choice to migrate to that country. Even playing TNT (tago nang tago, hide-and-peek with US authorities) is a preferred option for many undocumented Filipinos.

The Filipino-Americans are now the second fastest-growing Amerasian community (next to the Chinese) in the US West Coast. This fact is both a source of pride and anxiety for a people conscious of their heritage but puzzled by the contours of Philippine-American relations. A large ethnic community in a nation of migrants should be ready to make a difference, but as far as the Filipinos are concerned, that still has to be felt. About 18.3 percent of Amerasians have Filipino roots (2000 data). This makes the Philippines a potent political voice. The US Embassy in Manila is third in size after the US embassies in Mexico and Iraq. There is no doubt about mutual interests (though not parity of resources).

This year marks the centennial of the arrival of the sacadas (farmworkers) in Hawaii in 1906. The website of the University of Hawaii's Center for Philippine Studies (established by Hawaii's State legislature in 1975) under director Belinda Aquino is splashed with great and engaging tales of the rise of the progeny of Filipino-Hawaiian settlers from humble conditions to more fulfilling heights. Somehow, the "statehood" dream of some Filipinos in the Commonwealth era has become real, but with Philippine sovereignty intact. It is in this route of a collective psyche that state-side Pinoyos are able to unite with the "American dream" by free choice. Nationalistic fervor is not found wanting when options for dual citizenship and balikbayan homecomings are open.

Under these changing conditions and reasons, the idea of friendship with America has to be reviewed once more. There are levels of friendships as there are relations. One program, for instance, is the AFS Intercultural Program (American Field Service is composed of post World War I war-time ambulance drivers in Europe). Now back in the country (after a 20-year absence), the AFS sponsors Filipino students from various walks of life—whether from the mainstream urban sector or from remote farming and fishing villages, whether able-bodied or handicapped. Young participants are tasked with missions of goodwill to see for themselves the world, including the United States. Under a special program, young Filipino Muslims are given the chance to be hosted by US communities and share in the forging of friendship in these most difficult times. Socialization studies show how effective the young are in fostering sound social values. And their influence can last a lifetime!

The Subic rape case is unfortunate. It alleges misbehavior by rowdy, drunk, thrill-seeking servicemen smitten by the candor and charm of a liberated Filipina. When they decided to have fun, they were acting on their own terms, mindless of official frameworks that may be invoked when things go wrong—as, indeed, they did.

Finally, there is a historical irony: Japanese salarymen, Korean chaebol (business groups) members now comfortably walk the streets of Tokyo, Osaka and Seoul with their business suits, speaking spare but crisp English phrases. The values of democracy are recent to their societies. I want to believe that, even with our barongs and camisetas, we remain heirs to the modern democratic tradition. Can the hand of friendship—mature and realistic this time—restore our claim to our identity and true freedom?

Church and Calabasa

THE LONG VIEW

Manuel L. Quezon III

"But Ma'am, I have a problem explaining that. My constituents ask, if that's so, that would include your father—and you. And if that's the case, then why should they listen to you?"

"I am now tearing up your father's fork barrel check—"

"Ma'am! Kidding! A failure! Of course! Completely!"

"I knew you'd see the logic of our argument. If your mother wasn't part of my Top Shix Hundred Matronsh of Shivil Shoshiety, and if your father wasn't a congressman, I think I'd have shent General Fafaitan there long ago. Anyway, Mr. Barangay Captain Calabasha, let's talk about atin cu fung Shingaw—"

"Oh no, Ma'am! Please, when you address me formally I know you're angry! Please don't be mad!"

"You better believe it. Sho, you must frofagate the Holy Father's pastoral letter."

"Why Ma'am?"

"Attorney Lambada ish shaying that an --- nam of a feshteng y--- of a bishop (you shee, I am good in our regional languagesh) ish up to no good! I order you: Barangay Banshot must be 100 percent Bishop Ihipesteng y--- free! Anyway, I will pash the fone to Attorney Bihon. My husband and I are going to have hish halo fixshed. Ignashito the idiot broke their halosh again flaying hoola hoopsh. That'sh the problem with being married to a shaintly family. Here'sh Bihon."

"Hello! Calabasa! Can I tell you? That group must be destroyed!"

"Which group? Oh! I know. But how? The list of those to destroy is just getting longer and longer!"

"So what? What are we in power for?"

"True."

"Anyway, can I tell you? Secretary Sarado already said, it is sacrilege for that group to claim the support of the Cardinal of Seboom!"

"But it's true—"

"True? We said it's not true. And if we said it, everything else is false!"

"Oh. But Cardinal Vocal said it's true—"

"Can I tell you? Never mind. Plant seeds of doubt! We need to make all of those bishops realize that they're better off with us. Secretary Sarado already said he has the next brilliant scheme in mind, in case they don't behave!"

"What is it?"

"I have to tell you! It goes like this. He will text that Bishop Capilla said it was morally OK to cheat in the last elections to keep you-know-who, the dead guy, out of office!"

"Which dead guy? There are so many. Oh, I get it! Brilliant. If one bishop insists on being independent, we'll slander them all."

"So here's your order of battle. You will strictly enforce the separation of Church and State. That means, the Church gives communion to Ma'am only. Attack that bishop. Isolate the Cardinal. Attack that group of troublemakers."

"But we have all those other ministers praying over Madam and supporting her."

"So? If they pray for us, they are enhancing what the Holy Father says should be the excellent and close relationship between Church and State."

"He did? When?"

"Well, he telepathically communicated it. Or something. Just repeat it, or I'll tell Madam you keep asking questions."

"OK."

"Remember, Calabasa: the voice of Madam is the voice of God. Anyway I have to go. Madam is back. We have a novena to the Sacred Pidal of Jesus."

Leave no child behind

A GOOD FRIEND OF MINE WHO HAS BEEN WORKING abroad for most of his adult life recently sent me a list entitled "Pinoy Truisms." A lot of the entries were reworded one-liners that drew humor from the dissonance that occurs when one speaks in English but thinks in Filipino. "When it rains, it floods" is one such example.

Another one that I found particularly amusing was, "When all else fails, follow instructions."

I guess this was meant as a left-handed compliment to the Pinoy's legendary ability to adapt to the unfamiliar. Hollywood movie stars who get into situations like this are said to be "winging it." For us, this trait is known as "oido."

"Oido" is an excellent survival tactic, but nothing beats the ability to read, understand and follow instructions as a life skill. Many of us acquire this skill at an early age, from our parents and from our teachers and mentors. Indeed, the best schools in the country go to great lengths to ensure that their young pupils learn this lesson well.

But really good schools are few and far between, and unbelievably expensive. What happens to school-age children whose parents can't afford the tuition? There are about 18 million of them right now, enrolled in 41,000 public schools all over the country. Do we just leave them to their own devices and hope that the "oido" embedded in their genetic code kicks in when needed? Do we leave them behind?

The individuals and community groups that believe in the Foundation for Worldwide People Power's Education Revolution all say, "Not if we can help it."

Former Education Secretary Edilberto de Jesus—himself a founding trustee of the FWWPP—set the tone of this fledgling national movement that we launched in 2002 when he said: "Public education is too big to be left to government alone."

More and more people are latching on to the idea that making education a continuing community priority is the key to its qualitative improvement. Rather than dwelling on public education's endemic inadequacies, more and more organized groups have instead begun to ask, "How can we help?"

And help they have, selflessly and without fanfare, in whatever way they could. We started with simple school adoptions. Recently, we have begun to see the development of sophisticated community-driven education development programs being implemented by experienced NGOs and corporate foundations. Indeed, it only takes a spark to get a fire going.

Most interestingly, among the very first groups to reach out to us were our very own public school teachers. They knew that the Education Revolution was a private sector initiative. They felt that through this advocacy, they might be able to access new ways to sharpen both their professional skills and their understanding of their vocation.

We responded with the Mentoring the Mentors program, which has begun to exceed even our own expectations.

From our pilot sessions in the Iloilo City Schools division, we have now been able to conduct the Mentoring the Mentors program for the Department of Education at the regional level. We have engaged participants from "teacher education institutions" affiliated with the nationally organized Philippine Association for Teacher Education (PAFTE). And for the first time, the local chief executive of a major city has taken notice of the Education Revolution and thrown his hat into the ring.

Here's a short report on a landmark Mentoring the Mentors session (held in Quezon City) from Mary Ruby Palma, executive director of the Quezon City Gender and Development Resources and Coordinating Council (QC GAD).

"Quezon City Mayor Feliciano Belmonte Jr. recently sponsored the Mentoring the Mentors session held last June 13-16 at the Holy Spirit Mission Center in Tagaytay City. The event was organized through the QC GAD Council together with the GAD Resource and Coordinating Office, and the Institute of Politics and Governance in collaboration with the Foundation for Worldwide People Power."

The theme of the Quezon City mentoring session was "Isang Pananaw, Isang Direksyon, Sama-sama. Walang Iwanan!" (One perspective, one direction. Together. No one left behind!)

Mayor Belmonte said that their aim was "to imbue QC government officials under the mayor's office, public school officials and leaders in the non-government sector with mentoring skills and values needed to develop their second and third liners in governance, as well as motivate and inspire public school teachers with a sense of legacy and purpose."

"[The participants in these Mentoring the Mentors session] are the wellspring of the city government's talents, knowledge and experiences as servant-leaders," said Mayor Belmonte. "The Mentoring the Mentors session for Quezon City is part of our vision of good governance and quality living for the city's more than 2 million residents," the local chief executive added.

The training also supplements the city's capacity-building program for the barangays. Mayor Belmonte said that both experts and officials and GAD council members would guide and work as a team with some 200 barangay and department staff appointed as GAD focal persons.

QC School Superintendent Dr. Victoria Fuentes, together with her assistant superintendents and principals, and GAD council members and NGO leaders, all actively participated in the many lively and "energized" workshops of Dr. Evelyn Mejillano and Dr. Celia Adriano. The workshops seriously reflected on Chinito Rufino's call for a Kambio sa Pananaw (paradigm shift). Interpersonal dynamics got a boost from the Building Win-win Relationships of Lirio Mapa. The participants were made to realize the urgent need to start building up their "Emotional Bank Accounts."

Superintendent Fuentes and her team plan to hold Mentoring the Mentors sessions for their 143 schools on Sept. 5-8, 26-29 and Oct. 3-6, 2006. The other offices represented in the session made action plans specifically addressing problems that could be resolved using the many techniques learned in the session.

Even Dr. Bella Fernandez, QC budget officer, found herself designing an action plan for her office, using mentoring techniques to build better relationships among her office staff and their clientele.

Quezon City is the first local government unit in the entire country to adopt the Mentoring the Mentors program. Indeed, "it only takes a spark to get a fire going."

To Mayor Sonny Belmonte and his beloved Quezon City, welcome to the Education Revolution!

No longer charming and cute

AFTER GLORIA MACAPAGAL- Arroyo took over the presidency early in 2001, she declared in her first State of the Nation Address that she would eliminate the scourges of illegal gambling, illegal drugs, terrorist threats and insurgency. (Note that until recently, GMA was timid about making a reference to corruption in government.)

In those days, the sight of a charming, diminutive figure flanked by towering military officials in parades (symbolic of the inviolable constitutional supremacy of the duly constituted civilian authority over the military) tugged at one's heart.

Five years later, the problems of illegal gambling, dangerous drugs, terrorist threats and insurgency are still with us. And the diminutive figure, now suspected of having cheated in the last elections, is looking more like a vicious penguin (in spite of efforts at a Nora Aunor look), and the flanking figures now look more like hoodlums securing their money bag.

Exactly P1 billion has just been added to the kitty of GMA's generals, including those of the "Hello Garci" variety, for the daunting task of crushing the communist insurgency in two years (extended to five years, two days later). Communism as an ideology has been discredited in most parts of the world, but we have been grappling with the NPA problem for nearly four decades with no end in sight.

Repulsive as the NPA may be, it will be there two years from now, if GMA and her clique manage to cling to power. With the decent elements of Philippine society unable to dislodge her, we deserve to remain in our sorry and shameful predicament.

Doronila's speculations

AMANDO DORONILA'S COLUMN, "A sinister plan to butcher civilians" (PDI, 6/21/06), is full of speculations and malicious accusations against the Armed Forces of the Philippine in general, and the men in uniform in particular. No wonder, the insurgency problem in our country is getting bigger and bigger; this is because of people who have very good writing skills but limited knowledge of the people they are talking about.

Doronilla talks about "Bantay Laya" as if he has read that document. He talks about the government's counterinsurgency campaign as if he is one of its authors. He talks about military brilliance as if he was a soldier once. He talks about butchery and massacre as if he has seen brutal and violent death up close and personal. And he speculates on the evil soldiers do as if he is an angel.

Doronila should be fair and factual with what he writes.

Info drive on Philippine flag urged

DURING THE CELEBRATION OF the recent Flag Days from May 28 to June 12, the Philippine flag was really flying high all over the country, both in public and private establishments.

Unfortunately, some of our kababayans failed to display our flag in the proper manner. For example, some establishments placed the flag on the wrong side of offices—on the right of the viewer entering the office. Under Republic Act 8491 (An Act Prescribing the Code of the National Flag, Anthem, Motto, Coat-Of-Arms and Other Heraldic Items and Devices of the Philippines), the flag should be placed on the left.

Displaying the flag is not enough. I believe that it is also necessary that we conduct an information drive to make our people aware of the real meaning of displaying or hoisting the flag. Only thus will we learn to respect, love and take pride in our national flag, a great symbol of our beloved country.

People: the life of an avenue

IN REFERENCE TO NEAL CRUZ'S column about the diminishing sidewalks along Commonwealth Avenue ("The vanishing sidewalks," PDI, 6/23/06), I'd say the pedestrians should be extra careful and the Quezon City government should do something about the problem.

When I was young, I'd pass by Commonwealth Avenue as a commuter and a driver. I remember the road as almost the same as the roads here in Saudi Arabia, but for the number of pedestrians and sidewalks. If Commonwealth Avenue is flooded during heavy rainfalls, then it must be provided with a good drainage system.

I just hope that when I go back to the Philippines for a vacation, everything along Commonwealth Avenue would be OK. That road is not just for vehicles; people are its life, hence sidewalks, lanes, overpasses and intersections must be provided, maintained and developed to keep people "moving."

UN to review program vs illegal arms trade

THIS WEEK THE GOVERNMENT OF THE Republic of the Philippines will join the rest of the world in a meeting at the United Nations in New York to discuss the illicit small arms trade.

There are 640 million guns in the world, with 8 million new ones manufactured every year. Between 10 billion and 14 billion rounds of ammunition are made each year, enough to kill everyone on the planet twice over. Yet there are no global controls on the transfer of weapons between countries.

Despite the enormity of this global crisis, it was not until 2001 that the United Nations met to establish the "Programme of Action"—a set of very basic measures to control gun violence. But it was not effective enough, and in the five years since that meeting, 1.8 million people have died by the bullet.

As the "Programme of Action" is reviewed early this July, governments need to go much further and agree on measures that will truly protect people from gun violence. Such measures will include global criteria to prevent the sale of arms to places where they may be used for human rights abuses.

Our government will join its peers for two weeks of negotiations. During that time, 12,000 people will die from gunshots. If they do not take the decisions necessary to improve this situation, the terrible toll will continue for five more years.

Imelda: No compromise on ill-gotten wealth cases

By Joey A. Gabieta
PDI Visayas Bureau

TACLOBAN CITY—FORMER first lady Imelda Marcos said she would not enter into any compromise agreement with the government to settle the ill-gotten wealth cases filed against her family.

The ousted strongman Ferdinand Marcos' widow, who attended the 117th city fiesta on June 30, said that entering into a compromise agreement through the Presidential Commission on Good Government (PCGG) would be tantamount to an admission of guilt.

"I don't like compromise. I don't want to compromise honor. I don't want to compromise the truth..." she told the INQUIRER.

Earlier, PCGG Commissioner Ricardo Abcede expressed his intention to strike a compromise agreement with Ms Marcos to end the long-drawn battle of the government to recover the so-called Marcos wealth, estimated to be between $5 million and $10 million.

But the former first lady said any settlement on the string of cases filed against her by the government must be settled in the "right and legal way."

"Even though these injustices have been done to us, I want it settled the right and legal way. There should be a legal resolution of this issue," she added.

The flamboyant former first lady, who, during the interview at her "Baluarte" residence at San Jose here, was wearing a green-and-black pant suit with matching emerald earrings and an emerald pin, maintained that not a single centavo of government fund was siphoned by them during the 20-year Marcos reign.

She said the dismissal of several cases filed against her and her family in different courts, including her acquittal in a New York court, which she claimed to be the "trial of the cen-

MARCOS

She was optimistic that the remaining cases filed would also be dismissed.

The former first lady, who turned 77 yesterday, made her own projection as to when she sees the family would be freed from the cases. "I see that in two years time, these things will be over," she said.

Asked to comment on the second impeachment complaint filed against President Macapagal-Arroyo, Marcos said this would only lead to "division" among Filipinos.

"Enough is enough. Let us give the Filipinos a break and let us move forward," she said.

Asked if she would again request her daughter, Ilocos Norte Rep. Imee Marcos, not to vote for the impeachment, the former first lady said that her daughter is "intelligent enough" to know the right thing to do.

"But doing the right thing is not enough. We need to be whole... as a nation and as a people. Let us all be united," Marcos said.

tury," were proofs that they did not amass their wealth illegally.

Of the 901 criminal cases filed by the PCGG against their family, the number is now down to less than 10, Marcos claimed.

Ex-Cebu bank exec gets 1,000 years for estafa

By Jhunnex Napallacan
PDI Visayas Bureau

CEBU CITY—A REGIONAL TRIAL Court in Cebu sentenced a former bank manager to prison terms of over 1,000 years for 45 counts of estafa through falsification of public documents.

In a decision promulgated on June 22, Judge Geraldine Faith Econg of the Cebu RTC Branch 9 found Antonio Soontit, 55, former manager of Solidbank's Taboan branch here, of Angeles Du Compound, Redemptorist, guilty of pocketing P10.8 million from a client through forgery.

"He just bowed his head. It seemed that he was very sad when the verdict was read," according to the clerk of court, who requested anonymity.

The clerk of court said Soontit's total imprisonment period could be 1,228 years, since his conviction for every count of the 45 cases carried a prison term of 19-30 years.

Soontit was ordered to reimburse the bank P12.8 million, including P2 million in damages.

But Soontit has not been jailed since he posted bail when the case was filed in 1998. He paid P30,000 in bail for every count of estafa lodged against him.

He would also remain free because he could still file a motion for reconsideration to Thursday's decision, the clerk of court added.

Lawyer Eduardo Rosello, the bank's legal counsel, said the bank had immediately asked the court to cancel Soontit's bail bond and for his commitment to prison. Judge Econg scheduled the hearing of the motion for July 3.

According to the witnesses, mostly bank employees, who testified in court, Soontit pocketed the P10.8 million through the issuance of at least 29 manager's checks on various occasions that were debited from the account of a bank client, identified as Juanito Go.

The witnesses claimed that Soontit would bring the documents out of the bank, usually at lunch time, purportedly to have it signed by Go. Soontit would come back later with the documents already signed.

The irregularity was uncovered when Go questioned the huge withdrawals from his account without his knowledge and demanded a refund from the bank.

Go testified during the trial that he was not the one who filled up the documents and that his signatures had been forged.

According to the clerk of court, the bank management refunded Go of his money and soon after decided to sue Soontit, who was dismissed after the irregularity was discovered.

Tagbanua folk in Palawan get help from Finnish gov't

PUERTO PRINCESA CITY—AN organization of the indigenous group Tagbanua became the first beneficiary of the small grants program in Palawan of the Embassy of Finland.

With a P700,000-grant, the Bayaan it Kampong it Tagbanua Inc. (BKT) built a processing center for wild honey and cashew nuts and a rice and corn mill in a far-flung barangay.

During her recent visit to Aborlan, Palawan, her first visit to the province, Ambassador Riitta Resch of the Embassy of Finland in Manila, was impressed with the group's accomplishments.

Resch said the fund Finland donated was well spent.

At the project launch in Barangay Barake, the Tagbanua members presented Resch with their products and toured her around the facilities of the processing center.

Almost 85 percent of the residents of Barangay Barake are Tagbanua folk who rely on forest products to make a living.

They have the largest population of indigenous peoples in Palawan.

BKT vice president Erhilinio Porca said they were thankful to the Finland Embassy for the opportunity given to them.

BKT has more than 100 members but only half came to the launch because others didn't have somebody to look after their farm jobs.

Their main source of livelihood is gathering wild honey, rattan and almaciga from their ancestral domain in the forests of Aborlan.

Resch said she hoped that with this little help "the farmers would be able to send their children to school."

Linda Wirth, director for the Manila Office of the International Labor Organization (ILO), joined the ambassador during the project visit.

The ILO staff members in Manila had helped facilitate the grant for the Tagbanua as part of the organization's mandate to promote ILO Convention 169 that upholds the rights of indigenous and tribal peoples. Jofelle Tesorio, PDI Southern Luzon Bureau

7 land mines found in Bicol

BULA, CAMARINES SUR—LESS than a month after President Macapagal-Arroyo's declaration to wipe out communist insurgents in two years, the police's Explosive Ordnance Division (EOD) here found seven land mines, three of which had been detonated, but not before disrupting traffic along the Maharlika Highway in Barangay Pawili on Thursday.

Ninth Infantry Brigade spokesperson Lt. Col. Florante Isles said the recovery of the mines began at 6 a.m. Thursday after a civilian, whom he refused to name for security reasons, discovered the explosives hidden in the grass beside the highway.

Vehicles coming from other parts of Southern Luzon and headed for Albay usually traverse the road.

Isles said the seven improvised, remote-controlled land mines, which were powerful than a grenade, were remnants of a land mine explosion that occurred in the same area last Monday.

During the earlier blast, a military service vehicle headed for Naga City in Camarines Sur was damaged while a member of the Army's 65th Infantry Brigade, identified as Pfc. Soliman Pud-din, was seriously injured.

"Fortunately, the service vehicle was running fast. If not, there could have been casualties in that ambush, which were obviously perpetrated by the NPA (New People's Army)," alleged Isles.

Maj. Ramon Rosario, chief of the AFP Civil Relations Unit in Bicol, assured the public that government forces would intensify patrols, visitations and forums in the communities "so it could assess the real situation and immediately respond to the people's security needs." UPLB students boycott classes over tuition hike

LOS BAÑOS, LAGUNA—AROUND 200 students and workers from the University of the Philippines at Los Baños (UPLB) on Friday boycotted classes and led a rally against the proposed tuition increase during the meeting of the UP Board of Regents (BOR) held at the UP Open University here.

Led by the University Student Council (USC) of the UPLB, the students called on members of the BOR to rescind plans to increase by more than 300 percent tuition in all UP units around the country.

Under the proposed scheme, the current P225-P300 charge per unit in the UP units in Manila, Diliman and Los Baños will be raised to P1,000 a unit while the P200 per unit in the UP Visayas, Mindanao and Baguio will triple to P600 a unit.

Manzanilla said the university had also proposed to collect internet and energy fees from students.

The INQUIRER tried but failed to get the reaction of the BOR members who attended the meeting.

The protesters said the current slack in the national economy would make it impossible for many parents of students to afford the tuition increase and would only result in more bright youths out of school.

"It is very frustrating to note that the plan for a tuition increase in UP came at a time when the employers blocked proposals of a salary increase for our parents," said USC chair Day Manzanilla.

She said the proposed tuition increase would make UP education more expensive than most private educational institutions.

"That would defeat the purpose why the UP was created," she argued.

In June, UP units in Diliman and Mindanao increased library fees for incoming freshmen that amounted to P1,100.

Tuition increase in the UP College of Medicine was also recently approved from around P11,000 to P20,000," Manzanilla said.

She said the increases in school fees were largely caused by the reenacted 2005 national budget "which appropriated a large chunk of the budget to debt servicing and military spending while cutting the budget for education."

'Ambassador,' 'doc' strike anew, swindle wife of OFW by phone

By Carla P. Gomez
PDI Visayas Bureau

BACOLOD CITY—THE WIFE OF AN OVERSEAS Filipino worker lost P165,000 on June 31 to two unidentified swindlers who identified themselves as the "Philippine Ambassador to Dubai" and "a doctor," making her the third victim of the same modus operandi in the city this month.

Mary Jane Haro Tibi, 34, of UNOR-Ville, Barangay Mansilingan, told police that she received a phone call from a person who identified himself as "William Golez," the "Philippine Ambassador to Dubai," at about 10 a.m. on Tuesday, police reports said.

Tibi said Golez had told her that her husband, who is working in Dubai, stabbed a fellow employee and that he had also been stabbed.

'Dr. Zuniga'

Later, another caller, who identified himself as "Dr. Zuniga," contacted her using cell phone No. 09187168675, and informed her that her husband had sneaked back into the Philippines and that he was treating her husband.

The caller said P165,000 was needed for her husband's operation.

She said the caller asked her to send P60,000 to the ATM account of "Teresita Zuniga," and P75,000 and P35,000 to "Fernando Soriano Ocampo" of Imus, Cavite through Western Union.

At about 3 p.m. of the same day, after sending the money, Tibi said her father-in-law informed her that her husband was in good condition and had not been involved in any incident, contrary to the claims of the swindlers, police reports said.

Police also said that on Sunday, Amabelle Aloro Lacson, 47, of Acacia Road, Villa Angela here, reported to Precinct 4 that she received a phone call from a person who also identified himself as "Ambassador Golez" and informed her that her husband, who is a seaman, had killed his co-worker.

Another caller, this time, one who identified himself as "Dr. Fred Oribe," of Puerto Princesa City in Palawan informed her that he was treating her husband for his injuries.

Lacson said the swindler had demanded P50,000 to finance the operation of her husband, prompting her to send an initial P24,000 to the account of one "Pete Lowell Stone" of Dasmariñas, Cavite.

Contacted

After sending the money, she said she contacted the cellular phone number of Oribe, and, to her surprise, his number could not be reached.

She said she contacted her husband and discovered that she had been swindled.

On June 3, a 63-year-old woman from Bacolod City also lost P69,850 in cash to two persons who identified themselves as a "doctor" and a "pilot" and informed her that her daughter working at the Los Angeles Medical Center in California, USA had been involved in a commotion and had killed her nurse supervisor. The story also turned out to be false.

In Sorsogon, two mothers of OFWs, a retired employee of the Sorsogon Provincial Hospital, a hospital guard and a retired teacher all lost money to swindlers using the same modus operandi.

Trader, 3 kids killed

SAN MIGUEL, Bulacan—At least eight men shot and killed a palay trader and his three children in their home in Barangay Pacalag here on Friday. Town police chief Supt. Romel Salac said Ronaldo Valdez, 39, and his children Jennifer, 10, Nicole, 6, and Maxene, 4, were watching television at past 8 p.m. when the suspects entered their compound and strafed their house. Salac said the gunmen, who wore bonnets and ski masks, later entered the house and again shot Valdez. Valdez's wife, Myrna, was unhurt in the attack. Valdez died instantly while his daughter, Jennifer, died while being taken to a hospital here. Valdez's other daughters, Nicole and Maxene, died while being taken to a hospital in Cabanatuan City. Salac said they were still waiting for Myrna Valdez to give an official statement to the police. Carmela Reyes, PDI Central Luzon Desk

4 die in smash-up

DAVAO CITY—Four persons, including a village chair, were killed, while five others were injured in a smash-up in Compostela Valley around 2 a.m. on Friday. Compostela Valley police chief Senior Supt. Nestor Quinsay said 10 victims were going home after attending the fiesta celebration of another town, when the Toyota lite ace van they were riding in collided with a cargo truck in Nabunturan town. The circumstances behind the smash up were not clear yet, Quinsay said. He identified the victims, who died at the Tagum hospital, as Raymundo Castillo, 65, chair of Barangay Ngan in Compostela town, Roland Berioso, Nestor Baligat and Felipe Pepito. The barangay chair is a brother of Compostela Mayor Reynaldo Castillo. Dennis Jay Santos, PDI Mindanao Bureau

Leonardo Medroso—said they did not watch the fight.

Traffic was fairly light on Metro Manila streets and in cities as far away as Davao, apparently because people were glued to television sets to see Pacquiao duel Mexican Oscar Larios.

Crime incidence in Metro Manila from 9 a.m. to 4 p.m. yesterday—or around the time of the delayed telecast of the fight—was zero, according to the National Capital Region Police Office.

The fever didn't spare President Macapagal-Arroyo.

Back from her weeklong European trip, Ms Arroyo returned yesterday in time to watch the fight on television in Malacañang.

She said Pacquiao's victory was "another moment of pride for the Filipino." But her statement was not without political overtones: She said the nation needed "to be focused as Manny in preparing and persevering toward our goals—a strong economy, a stable political system and a prosperous society."

Earlier, Ms Arroyo said she would bestow on Pacquiao the country's first "Champion for Life" award.

For its part, the House of Representatives, which awarded Pacquiao the Congressional Medal of Achievement last year, will honor him with a new commendation when Congress resumes sessions later this month.

Prayers for Manny

In the City of San Fernando in Pampanga, a calesa driver Cipriano Mainin, 64, went to Mass and offered prayers for his man.

"Manny's my idol because he fights well and he's doing well in life," Mainin said.

The fight was special, too, for Jerby Santo, a disc jockey in Tacloban City in Leyte. He said it helped him forget "my personal problems and those of the nation."

In Pacquiao's hometown, around 2,000 people saw a delayed telecast of the fight at the airconditioned General Santos City gymnasium.

"Hit him hard," they chorused each time the hometown boy connected. "Kill him," another group shouted.

Skyhigh prices

When Larios fell twice to the canvas, the crowd went wild and chanted: "He has been knocked out. He has been knocked out."

But the Mexican was still on his feet.

Sky-high ticket prices prevented the crowds milling around the Araneta Coliseum in Quezon City from getting in to watch the match, but they did not leave disappointed.

For a few moments, they were able to gaze at the stars and were nob with a virtual "Who's Who" in show biz and politics.

Cheers erupted and cameras clicked away every time a major celebrity stepped on the carpeted VIP entrance of the coliseum.

Among the stars spotted were Gary Valenciano, Aga Muhlach and wife Charlene Gonzales, siblings Richard and Ruffa Gutierrez, Jericho Rosales—who played the role of the boxer in "Pacquiao the Movie"—and Heart Evangelista.

Politicians, too

Politicians were not far behind: Sen. Manuel Roxas II, who came with broadcaster Korina Sanchez, Executive Secretary Eduardo Ermita, Representatives Gilbert Remulla, Prospero Nograles and Joel Villanueva, and Quezon City Mayor Feliciano Belmonte Jr.

Some of the crowd had come expecting their P50 and P100 would buy them a ticket. They were shocked to find out that the cheapest ticket cost P528.

Still, others stayed, hoping that tickets would later be sold at discounted prices. But that did not happen.

Patron 1 and 2 tickets were sold for P52,800 and P47,520, respectively, while Patron 3 and 4 tickets cost P31,680. Lower Box tickets fetched P21,120, while Lower Box A and B were worth P7,920 and P2,640, respectively.

A consolation

Construction foreman Peter Balbon, 36, brought along his wife Teresa, 36, and son Carlo, 8.

"I thought it would only cost about P100 or so. We never expected it would cost so much," Teresa said.

Carlo seemed happy enough. "I saw Ricardo Gutierrez," the boy said.

Jun Cañete, 27, a nurse, also thought his P50 would be able to get him in.

"I'd rather stay here and watch the stars," he consoled himself, laughing. "It's not every day that I get to see them in person."

Sponsors made their presence felt at the coliseum entrances, with banners and streamers mounted at conspicuous spaces, booths offering souvenir shirts and Pacquiao CDs, and promo persons handing out freebies like balloons, carton fans and even samples of painkillers and cough medicine.

Impressed with Larios

The crowd watched the fight on monitors set up near the Araneta entrance. Cheers rang out every time Pacquiao landed a punch—until the coliseum staff moved the monitors away after seven rounds.

An usher later told the disgruntled crowd: "Please just watch it on TV later."

One Mandaluyong police officer watched the live telecast at the SM Megamall Cinemas without having to pay for the P320 ticket. He was impressed with Pacquiao's opponent.

"Larios was really strong. I did not expect he would last until the last round," said the officer. "He was already full of bruises but he was still fighting."

He and another policewoman were on beat patrol when the cinema manager invited them into one of the five cinemas showing the fight at the mall.

Packed theaters

The five cinemas were packed.

"I think more people went to SM than to the Araneta Coliseum," the cinema official joked, saying the steep ticket prices might have turned off the fans.

The cinemas virtually shook with cheers every time Pacquiao scored.

Under the Ortigas flyover in Mandaluyong, only one Metropolitan Manila Development Authority traffic enforcer was at the intersection: the others were inside the station, watching the fight on TV.

Policemen at the Eastern Police District Annex Office also gathered in one office to watch the delayed telecast. Two people reporting a crime were also stung during the long commercial breaks.

Still, not everyone had gone crazy.

In parts of Quezon City, some people did not seem very excited about the fight.

Stalls selling secondhand television sets on Edsa were tuned to the bout but there were very few people watching.

One possible reason was that people had tuned in to radio station dzMM, which described the fight blow by blow and revealed the result before the ABS-CBN's telecast got underway almost two hours later.

"There was too much hype. That turned me off," said a reporter, who chose to play games on the computer.

Here is how it was like in the rest of the country:

Luzon

● Melito Lacanale, a mini-bus dispatcher, spent the day at the People's Gym at the provincial capitol of Pampanga to watch the delayed telecast.

"Iba ang kamao niya (Pacquiao's fist is unique)," Lacanale said. He said he challenged his neighbors to place bets on Larios but no one took his dare.

● The large viewing screen in San Fernando, Pampanga, drew only a small crowd of 200 men and boys, leaving half of the seats in the gym empty. Many spectators were irked by the delayed telecast and the numerous commercials.

ABS-CBN personnel at the gym kept the audience's enthusiasm by holding games like arm wrestling. They gave away free drinks and candies.

● In La Union, farmers in Calungboyan in Balaoc town were all ears to the Balao Radyo broadcast of the bout. They said they were robbed of the excitement of seeing the fight on TV because of the delayed telecast.

● In Tarlac City, a number of meat stalls at the new public market on Ninoy Aquino Boulevard were empty because their owners had chosen to watch the fight at home.

● In Tuguegarao City, bets took the form of plates of pancit (noodles), bottles of beer and as much as P500.

● In eastern Laguna, streets were empty as drivers of jeepneys and tricycles parked their vehicles.

At the Our Lady's Nativity Parish in Pangil, a few people were seen attending a 2 p.m. funeral Mass for a relative, said its parish priest.

● Mario Marjalino, an Information Technology consultant in Masbate, mocked Malacañang's announcement that Pacquiao would be given the "Champion for Life" award.

"It's just a mere mask that hides the failures of our political system," he said.

● Broadcaster Jun Galias of Sorsogon said: "For a country in shambles like ours, every victory counts."

● Viel Balmeo, a third-year high school student at Maryhill College in Lucena City, said: "Yes, he's still the champion, but he no longer has the true heart and fighting spirit of a champ. Maybe because he wanted to stay longer so he could earn more money. He played it safe so as not to cause more harm to his body."

Visayas

Most Filipinos across the Visayas, even those who do not care much for boxing, either stayed home to follow the fight on TV or watched it on widescreen televisions set up in public places and restaurants.

But there were some who were frustrated. In Maasin City in Southern Leyte, subscribers to Dream TV were dismayed to learn that the cable firm did not carry ABS-CBN, which beamed the match.

● In Tacloban, Malyn Caca, 42, traveled 21 km just to watch her idol fight. Jeepney driver Virgilio Villablanca, 56, took the day off to watch the match.

Mayor Alfredo "Bejo" Romualdez put up a 42-foot wide screen TV at the convention center so that people from out of town could see the bout.

● Many Cebuans were dismayed by the delayed telecast. Betting was relatively light because it was hard to find someone who would bet on Larios.

● In Bacolod City in Negros Occidental, thousands trooped to the arts and youth center, where the city government had set up a widescreen TV, even if they already knew that Pacquiao had won.

Many people went to church early or chose to hear a later Mass so they could watch the fight.

Mindanao

In Davao City, children mimicked the two boxers during breaks, at times sparking petty quarrels.

In Cotabato City, fish vendor Mokamad Ayob gladly paid for the pulutan and the liquor he and his friends were consuming when Pacquiao floored his opponent in the 7th round. French-German final seen with Brazil's debacle

All-European semifinals

This is only the fourth World Cup in which all four semifinalists are European teams, after 1934, 1966 and 1982. The last time this happened, 24 years ago, three of the current semifinalists were also among the last four—Italy, Germany and France.

This is the first all-European Final Four since 1982 in Spain. Brazil's exit means that the Cup will have no South American representation in the last four for the first time since 1982. This marks the shift of the center of gravity of football to Europe.

With the disgraceful exit of the United States in the group stage of the Cup following its defeat at the hands of Ghana, the Cup becomes not only an all-European show but it also redraws the global soccer map along the lines of Old Europe that US Defense Secretary Donald Rumsfeld pitted against the New Europe of US allies, who sided with the United States in its "coalition of the willing" in the invasion of Iraq.

In soccer, Europe has found a stronger basis to cement its European unity and identity.

Germany and France are marching toward their final showdown armed with confidence by their victories against two of the most formidable football powers—Brazil and Argentina—in the midst of a resurging German nationalism after the unification of Germany.

Turning point for France

Starting badly, France had struggled through Group G and appeared headed for an early exit. The turning point came with the 3-1 win against Spain, following which the French regained their flair and began to move toward peaking at the right moment.

In Frankfurt, France rode on the talents of its captain, Zinedine Zidane, who lifted the team's game as did his two goals in 1998 that sank Brazil 3-0.

In Frankfurt, Zidane served a free kick to striker Thierry Henry, who was in the right place to volley the ball into the net. The goal came in the 57th minute. The French fought a Brazilian squad, overloaded with a galaxy of stars, including Ronaldo, Ronaldinho and Kaka, who failed to punch the French defense with their aggressive attacking style.

The French appeared to have outplayed the Brazilians with an opportunistic offensive strategy that took advantage of the Brazilian defensive gaps, opened by their tendency to push relentlessly forward. Zidane wove in and out the Brazilian midfield, and in the free kick, he found an opening in the right wing by lofting the ball to Henry, who was unmarked, giving him the space to strike.

Suspect Brazilian defense

The French midfielder, Patrick Vieira, had earlier spelled out the French strategy. He thought that the Brazilian defense was suspect because it left wide open spaces at the back.

"It is one of their weaknesses," Vieira said. "It is an attacking team... they will leave a space which we can exploit. In the attack, they create a lot of chances, and score a lot of goals. But we should not just defend. We need to impose ourselves and attack."

The Brazilian coach, Carlos Alberto Parreira, said: "We didn't think we would leave before the final but we have to face it. France played very well, they were more patient and their victory was a deserved one. We had talented players, we worked hard but there was something missing."

Germany's 4-2 victory against Argentina was not as one-sided as the score indicated.

Argentina displayed free-flowing offensive and controlled the ball for two-thirds of the first half. It scored 1-0 in the 49th minute. The Germans evened the score, 1-1, in the second half. The score was tied after 120 minutes. After the draw, the game settled down to a shootout on penalties. Falling back on their tenacity, the Germans wore down the Argentinians.

A feeling of invincibility

The Germans enter the semifinals with a feeling of invincibility after going through the bruising match with Argentina and a more impressive record than the French in the group elimination games.

They find in this year's World Cup a medium of expressing their new patriotism without reviving memories of Nazi nationalism in World War II.

Demoralized and battered after World War II, the former West Germany received a big boost in national spirit when it won the World Cup by beating Hungary 3-2 in the early post-war years.

They have refrained from an exuberant display of nationalism over their economic success, fearing it would revive memories of Hitler's use of the 1936 Berlin Olympics to demonstrate German's political and military power.

For the first time since reunification, the former two Germanys are competing in the World Cup under a single flag. All through the elimination rounds, the Germans wore their nationalism on their sleeves as they celebrated each triumph without the previous inhibitions Abalos: Why include me in impeachment ...

 "I'm very shocked with the recommendation to impeach Commissioner Borra. I'm doubly shocked that they want to include me," Abalos said in a telephone interview with the INQUIRER.

After several admonitions from the Supreme Court, the Ombudsman announced on Friday it had adopted a resolution containing factual findings which the House of Representatives could use to open impeachment proceedings against Election Commissioner Resurreccion Borra.

The high court had given the Ombudsman until June 30 to resolve its investigation of the liability of the poll officials who approved the deal.

The Ombudsman said Abalos and the rest of the commissioners who approved the award of the contract to Mega Pacific e-Solutions Inc. were still being investigated. Two and a half years ago, the Supreme Court voided the deal, saying the Comelec had disregarded the law and its bidding procedures.

Senate Minority Leader Aquilino Pimentel Jr. said it was not fair to single out Borra because all those who took part in the contract should be charged.

Apart from Abalos and Borra, retired Commissioners Luzviminda Tancangco, Rufino Javier, Ralph Lantion and Mehol Sadain, and current Commissioner Florentino Tuason Jr. approved the contract on April 15, 2003.

Augusto Lagman, the main complainant in the Mega Pacific deal, wanted Abalos on the list of poll officials to be recommended by the Ombudsman for impeachment.

"Abalos and all the other commissioners who signed the deal are culpable. And Abalos has been defending and defending the legality of the contract in so many forums," Lagman said earlier.

Adamant

Until yesterday, Abalos remained adamant that the Comelec had done nothing wrong. "No graft and corruption attended the bidding process," he insisted.

Abalos claimed that the deal's original price of P1.3 billion was arrived at during the term of his predecessor, former Solicitor General Alfredo Benipayo.

He claimed that during his term, the amount was lowered to P1.2 billion.

Abalos said the Comelec shouldn't be blamed because the machines were never used. No less than the Department of Science and Technology had certified that the machines were 100-percent accurate, according to him.

Opposition Sen. Panfilo Lacson said the Ombudsman's resolution holding only Borra liable for the Mega Pacific automation deal was proof that Abalos was untouchable.

"That is what we call selective justice. Abalos who is supposed to be in the front-line, being the chair, suddenly becomes the rear guard," Lacson said by text, referring to the Comelec chair.

"He is," the senator said, when asked if Abalos was untouchable. "Albeit temporarily owing to what he knows about the Garci [scandal] and his own role in the massive cheating in the 2004 elections."

Abalos is "safe in the meantime" until Malacañang "finds an alternate and fool-proof gag to keep his mouth shut," Lacson said.

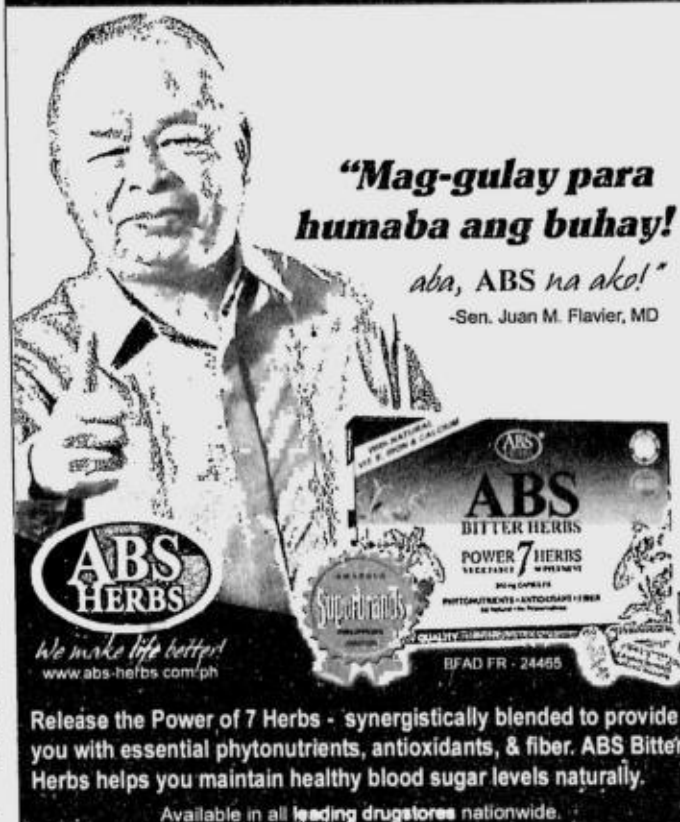

Lacson said Borra's "misfortune" stemmed from his candidness at a Senate hearing where he admitted that "cheating was indeed committed with regularity during past elections, particularly in the 2004 presidential election."

"Obviously, people from Malacañang have not forgotten it," he said.

Lacson said Ombudsman Merceditas Gutierrez should show her independence by removing the perception that she could not go against the wishes of her chief benefactor, First Gentleman Jose Miguel Arroyo.

Gutierrez had maintained she was not beholden to anyone, including Arroyo.

Larios gains respect for tough stand

By Francis Ochoa
Sports

THERE WAS ONLY ONE PERSON THE Araneta Coliseum crowd cheered for just before the super featherweight match between Manny Pacquiao and Oscar Larios started yesterday.

Twelve rounds, two knockdowns and a hundred traded punches later, there were two people the crowd gave a rousing ovation to.

Pacquiao made good on his promise to win. Larios made his point clear.

"I did not come here just to put up a good fight," Larios said through an interpreter. "I came here to win."

Larios did not manage to get the victory he had sought, one which would have pushed his career to meteoric heights. Instead, he stood on the wrong end of a lopsided unanimous decision after the bout, his left eye swelling and blood dripping from cuts above and below the same eye.

But he finished standing, which isn't something legendary compatriots Marco Antonio Barrera and Erik Morales could say about themselves in their defeats to the "Pacman."

"Before the fight, people were saying I was going into the lion's den," the 29-year-old Guadalajara, Mexico, native told reporters after the fight. "But I put up a good fight."

"We knew Manny Pacquiao was a great champion but I'm proud of my fighter," said Larios trainer Jose Reynoso. "He showed a lot of heart."

The former 122-lb world champion was supposed to be grossly overmatched against Pacquiao, who is starting an iron-fisted reign in the 130-lb ranks.

He was supposed to have a glass chin, one that stood no chance against the Filipino ring icon's pet left straight—a weapon that stopped a tough Barrera in the 11th round in 2003 and, for the first time, the granite-hard Morales in 10 early this year.

Pacquiao hit Larios several times solidly with that left straight. For good measure, the Filipino peppered the Mexican's face with his now formidable right cross. Each time, Larios managed to stay on his feet and weave out of trouble with accurate counter-punching.

And the two times he hit the canvas—one in the seventh and the other in the 12th—he got up quickly with hardly a wobble in his legs.

He rebounded so quickly from every Pacquiao onslaught that even Freddie Roach was amazed.

"Larios took a lot of shots from Manny and they were good solid shots," said Roach. "He really surprised me."

Pacquiao admitted that he didn't really put a lot of heat on Larios, saying he was content with keeping control of the match and tempering his aggressiveness with enough caution to prevent the Mexican challenger from landing a lucky punch.

But that was not what the huge crowd at the Big Dome saw.

"The fans saw a good fight between two brave warriors," Mendoza said after a post-fight press conference.

The fans also saw a Mexican warrior who refused to wilt under the pressure of facing an opponent with an already large persona magnified a hundredfold by the fact that he was fighting on home grounds.

They saw a proud, unyielding boxer who gave new meaning to the word fighter.

But it was a present that the country's favorite son nearly failed to gift-wrap.

Larios, the former two-time world champion, was not the sacrificial lamb Pacquiao's camp had hoped he would be for this homecoming fight of sorts.

The 29-year-old ring veteran surprised everyone as he applied pressure on Pacquiao early on and pinning the Filipino on the ropes in the third round and nearly taking him down.

Larios's shining moment, however, also turned out to be the beginning of his downfall.

"I felt that I could knock him out [after the third round] and I stopped listening to my corner," Larios said through an interpreter in the post-match press conference.

"He started fighting the wrong fight after the third round," said Rafael Mendoza, Larios's agent and adviser. "He lost his head thinking he could knock Manny Pacquiao out."

Suckered into a brawl, Larios gave Pacquiao the stage he needed to do what he did best: Showcase a natural flair for slugging it out and fusing a divided nation with a display of raw speed and punching power.

A country behind him

With the crowd—and an entire country—rallying behind him, the 27-year-old superstar slipped out from under the weight of Larios's third-round onslaught and uncorked a sharp combination that opened a cut under the Mexican's left eye.

"For a while, I was a little bit concerned," said Freddie Roach, Pacquiao's trainer. "But Manny recovered well after that."

"He hit me hard, but I wasn't that hurt," Pacquiao said. "In fact, I was able to get out of the ropes quickly after that. Hearing the crowd chanting my name helped. I knew I couldn't let [my countrymen] down."

"When he came back to the corner after the round, I told him not to get caught sleeping on the ropes again," Roach recounted.

By the time the sixth round came along, Pacquiao was certainly wide awake. His feared left straight started to find its range and his right cross, a weapon developed by his camp for his two previous fights against Erik Morales, came into play.

"He was just coasting in the early rounds and he did not turn up the heat until the sixth round," said Roach.

Pacquiao unleashed rapid combinations to the body and the head that repeatedly rocked Larios from the sixth round onwards, giving the Guadalajara native a sample of his much talked-about power and speed.

After bringing Larios to his knees in the seventh, Pacquiao kept up the pressure. In the 12th round, he drove a left jab straight to the head before uncorking another flurry that had Larios seated on the floor.

Larios: Speed beat me

"Manny's a great fighter, he beat me with his speed," said the former super bantamweight champion of the world.

The only thing faster than Pacquiao's punching flurry, it seemed, was Larios's ability to come back after every barrage, withstanding everything the Filipino threw at him to force the fight to go the distance. That was the Larios fight plan, to force an upset through the scorecards.

But Pacquiao still managed enough to seal a points victory—the three judges had it all for the champion at 117-110, 118-108 and 120-106—even if it wasn't quite the slam-bang performance the Filipino's camp had foretold during prefight interviews.

Partly, it was because, so Pacquiao said, he didn't go full steam against Larios.

"I knew I was in control of the match, leading on points, and I did not want to risk being too aggressive because he might catch me with a lucky punch," Pacquiao (42-3-2) said.

"If I pushed a little harder, I think you all know what the result would have been," he added, hinting that Larios (56-5-1) would not have lasted the distance.

It was also because Larios seemed to have the stars aligned for him yesterday.

Not only was Pacquiao far from the form that allowed him to knock Morales out early this year, but Larios himself seemed to have benefited greatly from the three-month preparation he undertook for this bout.

"Larios couldn't have fought a better fight than he already did [yesterday]," Roach said. Larios earned $450,000 for his effort while Pacquiao, who only prepared for six months for yesterday's tiff, picked up a cool $1 million.

Simple math proves the brotherhood of man

NEW YORK—IT'S HUMAN NATURE FOR people to wonder about their ancestors—who they were, where they lived, what they were like. People want to locate themselves in the sweep of history and position themselves in the web of human existence.

But few people realize just how intricately that web connects them not just to people living on the planet today, but to everyone who ever lived.

With the help of a statistician, a computer scientist and a supercomputer, Steve Olson—whose 2002 book "Mapping Human History" traces the history of the species since its origins in Africa more than 100,000 years ago—has calculated just how interconnected the human family tree is.

Olson and his colleagues have found that if you go back about 5,000 to 7,000 years ago, everybody living today has exactly the same set of ancestors. In other words, every person who was alive at that time is either an ancestor to all 6 billion people living today—or their line died out and they have no remaining descendants.

How can this be?

Doubling back

It's simple math. Every person has two parents, four grandparents and eight great-grandparents. Keep doubling back through the generations—16, 32, 64, 128—and within a few hundred years you have thousands of ancestors.

It's nothing more than exponential growth combined with the facts of life. By the 15th century, you've got a million ancestors. By the 13th century, you've got a billion. Sometime around the 9th century—just 40 generations ago—the number tops a trillion.

But wait. How could anybody—much less everybody—living today have had a trillion ancestors alive during the 9th century?

The answer is, they didn't. Imagine there was a man living 1,200 years ago whose daughter was your mother's 36th great-grandmother, and whose son was your father's 36th great-grandfather. That would put him on two branches on your family tree, one on your mother's side and one on your father's.

Never average

In fact, most of the people who lived 1,200 years ago appear not twice, but thousands of times on our family trees, because there were only 200 million people on Earth back then. Simple division—a trillion divided by 200 million—shows that on average each person back then would appear 5,000 times on the family tree of every single individual living today.

But things are never average. Many of the people who were alive in the year 800 never had children; they don't appear on anybody's family tree. Meanwhile, more prolific members of society would show up many more than 5,000 times on a lot of people's trees.

Keep going back in time, and there are fewer and fewer people available to put on more and more branches of the 6.5 billion family trees of people living today. It is mathematically inevitable that at some point, there will be a person who appears at least once on everybody's tree.

This means that when Muslims, Jews or Christians claim to be children of Abraham, they are all bound to be right. This also means that all of us have ancestors of every color and creed.

Sharing ancestors

"No matter the languages we speak or the color of our skin, we share ancestors who planted rice on the banks of the Yangtze, who first domesticated horses on the steppes of the Ukraine, who hunted giant sloths in the forests of North and South America, and who labored to build the Great Pyramid of Khufu," Olson and his colleagues wrote in the journal Nature.

Just one ancestral link to another cultural group among your millions of forbears, and you share ancestors with everyone in that group. So everyone who reproduced with somebody who was born far from their own natal home—every sailor blown off course, every young man who set off to seek his fortune, every woman who left home with a trader from a foreign land—as long as they had children, they helped weave the tight web of brotherhood we all share.

AP

queror and King Harold, vanquished by William at the Battle of Hastings.

Shields also descends from five popes, a whole mess of early New England settlers, and the royal houses of virtually every European country. She counts renaissance pundit Niccolò Machiavelli and conquistador Hernando Cortes as ancestors.

What is it about Brooke? Well, nothing—at least genealogically.

Even without a documented connection to a notable forebear, experts say the odds are virtually 100 percent that every person on Earth is descended from one royal personage or another.

"Millions of people have provable descents from medieval monarchs," said Mark Humphrys, a genealogy enthusiast and professor of computer science at Dublin City University in Ireland. "The number of people with unprovable descents must be massive."

Thousands of nobodies

By the same token, for every king in a person's family tree, there are thousands and thousands of nobodies whose births, deaths and lives went completely unrecorded by history. We'll never know about them, because until recently vital records were a rarity for all but the noble classes.

It works the other way, too. Anybody who had children more than a few hundred years ago is likely to have millions of descendants today, and quite a few famous ones.

Take King Edward III, who ruled England during the 14th century and had nine children who survived to adulthood. Among his documented descendants are presidents (George Washington, Thomas Jefferson, John Quincy Adams, Zachary Taylor, both Roosevelts), authors (Jane Austen, Lord Byron, Alfred Lord Tennyson, Elizabeth Barrett Browning), generals (Robert E. Lee), scientists (Charles Darwin) and actors (Humphrey Bogart, Audrey Hepburn, Brooke Shields). Some experts estimate that 80 percent of England's present population descends from Edward III.

Twist of fate

A slight twist of fate could have prevented the existence of all of them. In 1312, the close adviser and probable lover of Edward II, Piers Gaveston, was murdered by a group of barons who were frustrated with their king's ineffectual rule. The next year, the beleaguered king produced the son who became Edward III.

Had Edward II been killed along with Gaveston in 1312—a definite possibility at the time—Edward III would never have been born. He wouldn't have produced the lines of descent that ultimately branched out to include all those presidents, writers and Hollywood stars—not to mention everybody else.

Of course, the only reason we are talking about Edward III is that history remembers him. For every medieval monarch there are countless long-dead nobodies whose intrigues, peccadilloes and luck have steered the course of history simply by determining where, when and with whom they reproduced.

The longer ago somebody lived, the more descendants a person is likely to have today. Humphrys estimates that Muhammad, the founder of Islam, appears on the family tree of every person in the Western world.

Lineage

Some people have actually tried to establish a documented line between Muhammad, who was born in the 6th century, and the medieval English monarchs, and thus to most if not all people of European descent.

Nobody has succeeded yet, but one proposed lineage comes close. Though it runs through several strongly-suspicious individuals, the line illustrates how lines of descent can wander down through the centuries, connecting famous figures of the past to most of the people living today.

The proposed genealogy runs through Muhammad's daughter Fatima. Her husband Ali, also a cousin of Muhammad, is considered by Shiite Muslims the legitimate heir to the leadership of Islam.

Ali and Fatima had a son, al-Hasan, who died in 670. About three centuries later, his ninth great-grandson, Ismail, carried the line to Europe when he became the imam of Seville.

Many genealogists dispute the connection between al-Hasan and Ismail, claiming that it includes fictional characters specifically invented by medieval genealogists trying to link the Abbassid dynasty, founded by Ismail's son, to Muhammad.

No good evidence

The Abbassid dynasty was celebrated for making Seville a great cultural center at a time when most of Europe was mired in the Dark Ages. The last emir in that dynasty was supposed to have had a daughter named Zaida, who is said to have changed her name to Isabel upon converting to Christianity and marrying Alfonso VI, king of Castile and Leon.

Yet there is no good evidence demonstrating that Isabel, who bore one son by Alfonso VI, is the same person as Zaida. So the line between Muhammad and the English monarchs probably breaks again at this point.

But if you give the Zaida/Isabel story the benefit of the doubt too, the line eventually leads to Isabel's fifth great-granddaughter Maria de Padilla (though it does encounter yet another potentially fictional character in the process).

Maria married another king of Castile and Leon, Peter the Cruel. Their great-great-granddaughter was Queen Isabel, who funded the voyages of Christopher Columbus. Her daughter Juana married a Hapsburg, and eventually gave rise to a Medici, a Bourbon and long line of Italian princes and dukes, spreading the Mohammedan line of descent all over Europe.

Finally, 43 generations from Muhammad, you reach an Italian princess named Marina Torlonia.

Her granddaughter is Brooke Shields. AP

MMDA wants to turn Metro into wireless community

By Edson C. Tandoc Jr.

IMAGINE THESE: WIRELESS CAMERAS AND sensors installed in key streets in the metropolis to monitor and report traffic jams and flooded areas—all in real time.

Microchips installed in buses and jeeps to easily monitor the number of public vehicles in particular routes compared to the volume of passengers.

Should plans push through—depending on the budget of the Metropolitan Manila Development Authority—then these sophisticated technologies would soon find their way to streets in Metro Manila.

"We need technology to improve our services," MMDA chair Bayani Fernando said yesterday in his weekly radio program over dzBB.

Digital city

Bayani said he got the idea from Taipei in Taiwan, where he had just attended a three-day conference with officials from other countries about creating "digital cities." Taipei is considered one of the biggest Wi-Fi communities in the world.

The conference encouraged community leaders to take advantage of broadband-wireless technologies, like Wi-Fi (See In The Know below), to enhance emergency responses, improve government service and lower telecommunication costs.

"I want to start the project in three to four months. I hope we can fully implement this before Christmas," Fernando said in his program.

He told the INQUIRER they would soon start talking with companies for the installation of Wi-Fi Networks in key streets in Metro Manila.

He said wireless connection would enable MMDA head offices and response units to quickly monitor—using wireless cameras which will be installed in key areas—traffic congestion and even flooding in key areas in the metropolis.

"We can even put sensors to monitor if our flood control pumping stations are functioning or not," Fernando added.

Taking his vision further, Fernando said they could even put chips on public utility vehicles to boost the still shaky implementation of the Organized Bus Route System.

He said with the chips, the MMDA could monitor how many buses were passing through a certain access point, giving the agency the accurate volume of traffic in a given area.

"Using wireless cameras, we can see the volume of passengers, say in Cubao. Then, we can deploy more buses there," the MMDA chair added.

More efficient setup

He said this communication setup would be "more efficient" for the agency, which is still troubled by huge phone bills.

Fernando admits the new project is starkly different from previous MMDA ideas, which had been frowned upon by many as backward, if not primitive, like the erection of concrete barriers and pink railings and even the use of pink cloth in controlling overstaying buses.

The MMDA official, however, could not yet say just how much funding his new idea would require. "We will have to check first how much these technologies cost," he said in an interview after his radio show.

IN THE KNOW

SHORT FOR "WIRELESS FIDELITY," WI-FI is a way to connect electronic devices such as computers and personal digital assistants (PDAs) to each other without the use of wires. Wi-Fi networks use radio technologies called IEEE802.11a, 802.11b or 802.11g to provide this connectivity. A Wi-Fi network can either connect computers to each other or to the Internet.

A Wi-Fi hotspot is an area where wireless technology both exists and is available for consumer use. Within these hotspots, devices with Wi-Fi connectivity can use the technology—usually for free. These hotspots are now common in places such as airports and coffee shops. The most common use for these hotspots is for people with Wi-Fi-enabled laptops and PDAs to gain access to the Internet.

The range of these Wi-Fi networks vary, depending on whether the network is in an open environment, or hampered by walls and furniture. On the average, it provides a range of within 75 to 150 feet in a typical office or home setup. Speed of data transmission gradually deteriorates as the distance between the main access point and the device increases.

QC gov't building new hospital

By DJ Yap

A NEW HOSPITAL OFFERING A COMPLETE line of medical services will soon rise in Quezon City.

The Quezon City government has announced the construction of the Balgana General Hospital on Congressional Avenue in Project 7.

To be headed by Dr. Janice de Leon, the hospital will carry a complete line of specialized medical care, enough to serve the people in the area.

It will offer clinical (medicine, pediatrics, obstetrics and gynecology, surgery and family medicine), ancillary (clinical laboratory, radiology and pharmacy), emergency and outpatient services, among others.

The hospital's mission, according to De Leon, is to offer patients affordable and competent medical services.

Once completed, it will become the 65th hospital in Quezon City which is billing itself as a health and wellness hub. Of the 65 hospitals, 18 are government-owned, including the Quezon City General Hospital.

All in all, they have a combined bed capacity of 8,620, not including 55 health centers, 36 sub-health centers, of which four are maternity clinics spread out in the city's four districts.

Mayor Feliciano Belmonte the other day said there were also plans to improve the facilities of the QC General Hospital to turn it into a world-class medical center.

GET YOUR CHILD READY FOR SCHOOL, IN MIND AND BODY

Now that vacation time is over and the school season is starting, school kids are all agog preparing for another year of interacting with classmates and teachers, doing homeworks and projects, and most of all, learning new things and discovering subjects that are more complex than their last ones.

Usually, at the start of the school year, kids are more enthusiastic and energetic, as their minds and bodies are still fully-rested from the vacation and their active brains are fresh and hankering for new stimulation.

But, experience tells us that, after the novelty of a new school season has faded, and they become swamped daily with school tasks and assignments, children experience fatigue and become sluggish.

You can help him maintain his mental and physical energy by supplementing a healthy diet with natural brain and body boosters.

Memory Plus Syrup with natural brain-enhancing nutrients can give your active school children the extra push to keep him on his toes, both mentally and physically, throughout the school year.

Memory Plus is natural and kid-friendly, made from four powerful brain tonics Centella asiatica, Bacopa monniera, Lecithin and DHA. Centella asiatica stimulates the nerves and intelligence-promoting and anti-stress properties. It is particularly high in B-complex vitamin necessary for proper brain/nerve function. Bacopa monniera has bacosides which exert positive effects on cognitive function. Bacosides do this by boosting the activity of certain cell proteins involved in the production of new brain cells connected to learning and memory and by restoring functioning of worn-out nerve cells. Lecithin contains choline that makes acetylcholine, main neurotransmitter or chemical messenger in the brain involved in memory. DHA (Omega 3) has been proven to improve intellectual functioning of children which impacts their IQ, school abilities and academic performance. It also reduces inflammatory chemicals in the brain. Memory Plus contains an adequate mix of all these ingredients, so that your child gets sufficient amount of each of the brain nutrients.

Don't let your child fall prey to mental and physical fatigue while in school. Help him be the best student he can be by giving him Memory Plus regularly to revitalize his intellectual capabilities and sustain him in his physical activities.

Little (plant) shop around the corner

Makati Garden Club offers an oasis for stressed-out urbanites

By Tina G. Santos

AN OASIS SITS IN THE HEART OF Makati City, surrounded by skyscrapers, giant shopping malls and multiple-lane highways.

The Makati Garden Club (MGC) is a 2,500-sq m flower and garden center at the corner of Recoletos Street, near the intersection of Edsa and Ayala Avenue.

From the bougainvillea-covered arc that welcomes visitors near the main gate, to the tree-lined footpath that takes them around the area, the garden provides a refreshing respite from the traffic and pollution in the city.

Inside the cozy bungalow, it's easy to forget that you are in the country's financial business district and even possible to ignore the noise and gas fumes from passing motor vehicles.

Stress reliever

"People come here to relax, relieve stress and appreciate nature," MGC founding president Ma. Luisa Perez-Rubio told the INQUIRER.

She added that many garden enthusiasts drop by to buy ornamental plants.

The MGC was formed in 1957 but it was only in 1974 that the group was given permission by business tycoon Enrique Zobel, the owner of the lot, to turn the property into its headquarters.

"This was a vacant lot, sometimes used as a bathroom for the dogs. That's why Mr. Zobel asked me to put up something here," Perez-Rubio said. She added that it took them about three years to spruce up the place.

The property used to measure about 3,500-sq. m. but they had to give part of the lot for the expansion of Edsa.

Plant lovers

"We used to meet at the private homes of the different members," said Perez-Rubio. "We thought then that we should put up a club that caters to people who want to learn how to appreciate plants."

At first, the group was called the Forbes Park Garden Club, as membership was exclusively for residents of the posh village. After other people from different communities around the city joined the club, the name was changed to the Makati Garden Club.

"I believe that appreciation for plant life is not limited to people in Forbes Park so I opened the club to other members," Perez-Rubio said.

Growing membership

From a small select group in the 1950s, the club's membership has grown to over a hundred.

Conchita "Ching" Caluag, 72, who once headed the organization, recalled: "During those times, housewives were part of either a garden or a gourmet club."

She lamented, however, that it is harder to recruit new members these days as most people are busy with work or business.

What was once idle land has now become a landscaped garden that is home to around 300,000 kinds of plants belonging to some 150 species. Shaded by trees and trellises are different kinds of herbs, ferns, palms and bromeliads, among others.

Different kinds of trees

The trees include the fruit-bearing star apple, santol, chico, macopa and mango, and flowering ones like the yellow tabebuia, kamuning, Palawan cherry, champaca and calachuchi. There are also full-grown pine, banaba, eucalyptus, ficus benjamina, acaia and balet trees.

Adding splashes of color to the garden are various flowering plants that include orchids, san-tan, margaritas, rubias, adelfa, alamanda and yellow sundrops.

Caluag said they are trying to develop an "old-fashioned" garden for the benefit of the younger generations, adding that the place has become a hangout, not only for club members but for families and anyone who wants to take a break from the hustle and bustle of city life.

Tours for special kids

Sometimes, she added, schoolchildren and even kids with special needs are treated to a tour of the place.

"We take them around and introduce to them the different kinds of plants," Caluag said. "That's why we've been trying to cultivate plants like begonias, lantana, chichirica and gumamela, just to name a few. Most kids today no longer know how these plants look like."

The garden's lush foliage has made it a favorite nesting place for many birds.

Haven for artists

But they are not the only visitors. Even artists come to the garden for a quiet, apolitical demonstration against turning everything into concrete. "Sometimes, the members also paint," Caluag quickly added, saying artists draw inspiration from the lush foliage.

The main entrance to the garden is sandwiched by wire fences adorned with flowering plants and vines, including yellow bells and forget-me-nots.

As visitors pass through an arc covered with pink bougainvillea flowers, a lined pathway takes them around the garden, and a function room where members hold meetings or bazaars.

Just a few steps away is a lagoon that greets visitors on their way to the flower shop located at the left side of the garden.

Self-sufficient

Caluag said the flower shop was set up to make MGC "self-sufficient." Apart from blooms like roses and Malaysian mums, the shop also sells various gardening tools and fertilizers.

Caluag said some of the plants and flowers sold at the garden come from some of their members' farms.

"Although we try to propagate plants here at the garden, there are some kinds, like the mums, that only grow in places with a cool climate like Tagaytay City," she added.

A few meters away from the flower shop is a garden room used for storage which members want to convert to a painting or exhibit area.

"The place not only offers a bit of peace and quiet amid the city noise, but a breath of fresh air amid the smog as well," said Luz Salve, 36, a resident of nearby Urdaneta Village.

Club officers and members, however, said that the club is more than just flowers and plants.

"This is also a center for learning everything about gardening, orchid and bonsai culture and flower arrangements, among others," Caluag said.

Another active member of the club, Regina Paterno, who also heads the environmentalist group Winner Foundation, said they often invite speakers who talk about various topics concerning plants and other related garden arts and crafts.

Other 'clients'

The MGC also supplies plants for the gardening projects of other organizations like the Winner Foundation's urban forests at the grounds of the Cultural Center of the Philippines complex in Pasay City and the Hospicio de San Jose in Manila.

Apart from plant and flower sales, the club has also sustained itself through various activities, the most well-known of which is the annual Festival of Trees (FOT), an auction of beautiful Christmas trees that had been decorated by MGC members and precious artworks donated by prominent Filipino artists and painters.

Proceeds from the FOT event are used for various antipoverty and environmental programs, Caluag said, adding that the club also relies on annual membership dues (P1,000), bazaars, donations and other fund-raising activities.

The garden is open to the public everyday, except on Sundays, from 8 a.m. to 5 p.m. Admission is free.

US officials deport ex-cop wanted for murder in RP

By Margaux C. Ortiz

HIS CRIMES HAVE FINALLY caught up with him.

A former Caloocan City policeman who fled to the United States after allegedly killing a man five years ago was deported to the Philippines after violating immigration laws abroad.

National Bureau of Investigation (NBI) Interpol Division chief Claro de Castro Jr. said Segundo Santiago would finally be tried for separate cases of homicide and illegal possession of firearms pending at the Quezon City Regional Trial Court after the US Immigration and Customs Enforcement (ICE) deported him last June 27.

De Castro said they had earlier received a letter from the Office of Migrant Workers at the Department of Foreign Affairs asking the NBI to check if Santiago had a criminal record. The OMW made the query after it received information about his deportation.

Two arrest warrants

Based on a check of its records, the NBI found out that branches 79 and 97 of the Quezon City RTC had issued two arrest warrants for the suspect for his supposed involvement in the killing of Eduardo Donato on May 30, 1991 on Edsa.

Investigation showed that Santiago, who was tagged as the mastermind in the killing, had used a .45-caliber pistol that was registered in the name of a certain Alejandro Penas.

De Castro said the suspect did not appear during investigation and the subsequent trial.

Fugitive from justice

The former policeman allegedly flew to the US to avoid prosecution, De Castro said.

However, he was arrested by Seattle authorities last May 16 for violating US immigration laws.

Santiago, who was escorted by ICE officers, arrived in Manila last June 29 and was immediately turned over to the NBI Interpol.

Marikina motorists urged to use biofuel

By Edson C. Tandoc Jr.

DRIVING IN MARIKINA? BETTER IF YOU start using alternative fuel.

The City Council has passed a resolution "strongly encouraging" motorists in Marikina to use biofuel like coco-diesel and ethanol.

According to the resolution, the use of environment-friendly motor fuel additives would minimize the emission of harmful pollutants and help keep the air clean.

Compliance with the resolution, however, was not mandatory as city officials explained that most vehicles plying the city streets, including those owned by the local government, had not yet been calibrated to use biofuel.

In addition, biofuel may be available and safer for the environment but available products were still more expensive than commercial diesel or gasoline, they said.

Marikina City Mayor Marides Fernando is scheduled to sign the resolution this morning. The city government will also hold a week-long exhibit on alternative fuel at the City Hall lobby.

Joining the exhibit are car manufacturing companies which will be displaying "environment-friendly" car models, manufacturers of emission-reducing gadgets and suppliers of alternative fuel like the Philippine Coconut Authority.

Marikina City Science High School graduate Raymond Joseph Amurao, who won an international science fair, will also display his prize-winning project on extracting biofuel from janitor fish.

Holiday today in Pasig

TRANSACTION business at the Pasig City Hall today? THERE will be no one to attend to you. To commemorate the 433rd foundation anniversary of Pasig City, Malacañang has declared July 3 a special nonworking holiday in the city. "It is but fitting and proper that the people of the City of Pasig be given full opportunity to celebrate the occasion with appropriate ceremonies," Executive Secretary Eduardo Ermita said. Aside from local government offices, schools and even commercial establishments in the city will also be closed today. Pasig City's foundation day anniversary actually falls on July 2 but because yesterday was a Sunday, Malacañang just decided to move the holiday to the next working day.

What's that weed?

GUESS what was growing in their backyard? Two women in Muntinlupa City were picked up for questioning on Saturday by the police after a marijuana plant was found in their backyard. Heidi Arclaga, 30, and Nida Taway, 38, were brought to the Drug Enforcement Unit of the Muntinlupa police for investigation. Ronald Arcilla of the Tunasan Barangay Police told the INQUIRER. Arcilla said they went to Arclaga's house at 178 Buendia Street in Barangay Tunasan, after they received a tip that the two women had a marijuana plant in their backyard. They took pictures of the plant which, according to SP01 Benjie Madriaga of the Muntinlupa police DEU, was four feet high. The women, who denied that they owned or planted marijuana in their backyard, were released after nearly three hours of questioning by the police, said Madriaga. "We can't detain them because anyone could have planted it and their backyard is an open area where eggplants and others shrubs are planted," he explained.

DID YOU KNOW

DID YOU KNOW THAT FORMER PRESIDENTS Corason Aquino, Fidel Ramos and Joseph Estrada did not live at Malacañang Palace (main) during their term?

Aquino and Ramos chose to live at the nearby Arlegui Guest House, while Estrada stayed at the Premier Guest House. Interestingly, Aquino's office in the Premier Guest House was the bedroom of ousted dictator Ferdinand Marcos at the time her husband Ninoy was killed.

The three former Presidents and the last Spanish Governor-General, Fermin Jaudenes, were the only heads of the country who did not live at the Palace since it became the official residence of Spanish governors-general in 1863.

Tensions in East Timor ease

DILI—EAST TIMOR ON SUNDAY waited for its new prime minister to be named, as the head of Australian peacekeepers welcomed a new era of calm after weeks of violent upheaval.

A week of peaceful protests in the capital Dili appeared to have eased tensions, and there was further optimism as behind-the-scenes talks were on track to select a premier within the next few days, politicians and officials said.

Leaders of the Fretilin party of ex-premier Mari Alkatiri are due to meet President Xanana Gusmao this week over the appointment of a new government to lead the tiny nation out of its worst crisis since independence in 2002.

Fighting between rival factions of the security forces and gang warfare raged for weeks, leaving at least 21 people dead and forcing some 150,000 to flee their homes in a nation of less than one million people.

Fears of fresh violence last week were allayed when up to 6,000 Alkatiri supporters left Dili after a major show of strength on the streets which passed off without any major clashes.

"We have got a watershed in the situation here as a result of the successful conduct of two major demonstrations," Australia's Brigadier Mick Slater told reporters Sunday.

"I think we have had a successful week as far as stable operations have gone in Dili."

More than 2,200 peacekeepers, the majority from Australia but also from New Zealand, Portugal and Malaysia, arrived in the tiny nation in May as violence worsened in the country.

The unrest was sparked by Alkatiri's decision to sack 600 soldiers, nearly half of East Timor's tiny army, in March for desertion after they walked out claiming discrimination.

Alkatiri quit Monday after being widely blamed for the disturbances and over allegations he was involved in a plan to arm a civilian militia to attack his political foes.

One of the favorites to succeed Alkatiri, Jose Ramos Horta, an independent and the 1996 Nobel peace prize winner, will run the government until a new leader is appointed by the president which could happen in the coming week. AFP

Japanese media cool on Koizumi-Bush ties

TOKYO—JAPAN SHOULD SEEK A more mature relationship with the United States rather than one based on personal bonding, the country's media said after Prime Minister Junichiro Koizumi's trip to Washington.

Koizumi displayed his media savvy by crooning Elvis Presley hits during a visit to Graceland with US President George W. Bush, with whom he has forged a close friendship over his five years in office.

But the Mainichi Shimbun newspaper said Japan's diplomacy should not be so dependent on the prime minister's personal ties.

"It was disappointing that Koizumi failed to make full use of his friendly Japan-US relationship on the real international scene," the newspaper said, bemoaning "Japan's failure" to win a permanent seat on the UN Security Council.

Tokyo failed to get a formal commitment of support from Washington for its bid to obtain a permanent seat on the Council, which was blocked by China. AFP

THE SPACE shuttle Discovery sits on launch pad, July 1, at the Kennedy Space Center in Florida. NASA scrubbed the launch of Discovery due to unfavorable weather conditions. AFP

Clouds delay shuttle launch at least 1 day

CAPE CANAVERAL, FLA.—NASA postponed the launch of space shuttle Discovery until Sunday at the earliest due to possible lightning and thunderstorms near the Florida launch pad on Saturday.

"It's not a good day to launch the shuttle so we're going to try again tomorrow," launch director Mike Leinbach said, with the countdown clock stopped at nine minutes.

Weather was a persistent worry leading up to Saturday's scheduled launch, with storm clouds hovering over Kennedy Space Center. The forecast for Sunday is no better, with a 60 percent chance that storms could force a delay of that launch too.

Sunday's preferred launch time is 3:26 p.m. (3:26 a.m. Monday in Manila).

This is only the second shuttle mission since the fatal Columbia accident in 2003, and is a critical turning point for NASA.

If Discovery is critically damaged on launch or afterward, and astronauts cannot fix the problem in orbit, the seven crew members would stay on the Space Station and wait for rescue, but NASA chief Mike Griffin has said it could be the end of the shuttle program.

That would leave the $100 billion International Space Station incomplete and would also mean the United States has no way to carry humans to space.

Griffin decided to launch the shuttle over the objections of the US space agency's head of safety and its top engineer, who wanted the mission delayed to allow more work on the fuel tank and its insulating foam.

The space shuttles began flying in 1981 and is scheduled for retirement in 2010 as NASA develops a new manned spaceship that can travel to the moon and beyond.

The shuttle is the only spacecraft able to lift the heavy components needed to finish the space station.

NASA has spent $1.3 billion on repairs and safety upgrades to the shuttle fleet since Columbia disintegrated over Texas in February 2003, killing all seven crew. Reuters

Dutch to hold polls in November

AMSTERDAM—THE NETHERLANDS will hold national elections in November after the collapse of Prime Minister Jan Peter Balkenende's center-right coalition government over immigration policy, officials said on Saturday.

Head of state Queen Beatrix had appointed former Prime Minister Ruud Lubbers to advise on the formation of a caretaker government and to set the date in November for the elections, the General Affairs Ministry said in a statement.

Opinion polls show the opposition Labor Party would win the elections but fall far short of an outright majority, leaving the political leaning of a future government unclear. Balkenende's government is the third to collapse since 2002.

The polls cast doubt on whether Labor could build a majority coalition of left-wing parties, although voters backed leftist parties in local elections three months ago, rejecting anti-immigration populists and the ruling center-right parties.

Political analysts said the government's collapse could delay planned corporate tax cuts that could hit companies that earn the bulk of their income domestically, although blue chip firms with overseas operations would feel less of an impact.

Balkenende tendered his government's resignation on Friday after the small D66 party quit the administration over the handling of a Somali-born legislator's citizenship.

The caretaker government is widely expected to be a minority coalition of Balkenende's Christian Democrats (CDA) and VVD Liberals.

"Lubbers will investigate the possibility of a cabinet formed by CDA and VVD that will have to realize early elections on a date in November to be set under the direction of Lubbers," said the ministry.

The collapse of the government occurred amid public concern over the immigration and security policies which helped Balkenende win power in 2003. Reuters

The lonely American just got a bit lonelier

FOR AS LONG AS HUMANS have gathered in groups, it seems, some people have been left on the outside looking in. In postwar America in particular, the idea that loneliness pervades a portion of society has been a near-constant. Only the descriptions have changed: the "lonely crowd" alienation of the 1950s; the grim career-driven angst of the '70s and '80s; the "Bowling Alone" collapse of social connections of the '90s.

There is a new installment in the annals of loneliness. Americans are not only lacking in bowling partners, now they're lacking in people to tell their deepest, darkest secrets. They've hunkered down even more, their inner circle often contracting until it includes only family, only a spouse or, at worst, no one.

A recent study by sociologists at Duke and the University of Arizona found that, on average, most adults only have two people they can talk to about the most important subjects in their lives—serious health problems, for example, or issues like who will care for their children should they die. And about one-quarter have no close confidants at all.

"The kinds of connections we studied are the kinds of people you call on for social support, for real concrete help when you need it," said Dr. Lynn Smith-Lovin, an author of the study. NYT

Kuwait Cabinet quits after debacle

KUWAIT CITY—THE KUWAITI Cabinet resigned Saturday after the opposition scored a resounding victory in landmark parliamentary elections in which women took part for the first time.

The resignation, which is required by law in the oil-rich Gulf emirate after an election, followed a final brief meeting of the Cabinet chaired by Prime Minister Sheikh Nasser Mohammad al-Ahmad al-Sabah.

The emir, Sheikh Sabah al-Ahmad al-Sabah, is expected to begin consultations Sunday on the formation of a new Cabinet, which must be completed within two weeks.

The head of state can either ask the outgoing premier to form a new government or appoint a new prime minister.

Kuwait's parliamentary democracy is not based on a multi-party system and political parties are not recognized although several political groupings operate freely as de facto parties.

The Kuwaiti opposition, a loose alliance of Islamists, liberals and nationalists, won 33 seats in the 50-member parliament, securing the absolute majority required to push through legislation. AFP

Canada to upgrade its military might

TORONTO—PRIME MINISTER Stephen Harper's Conservative government has announced the most aggressive upgrade of Canada's military equipment in decades, laying out new expenditures of $15.3 billion to improve transportation capacities.

The new spending fulfilled Harper's campaign promises from January's election and did not come as a big surprise. But it represented the biggest break in policy by the new and mostly cautious Conservative government from 13 years of Liberal previous governments. The Liberals reduced military spending to a low of $8.4 billion in 1998, one of the lowest per capita among industrial countries.

But as Canada takes part in more global aid missions and stretches its military muscles in Afghanistan, where it is involved in its biggest combat operation since the Korean War, the government has made a case that the military needs more mobility and muscle.

The spending plan, detailed in a series of four announcements last week, sets aside money for new helicopters, planes, vehicles and ships that will give the armed forces a level of independence not seen in years after budget cuts in the 1990s halted replacements and upgrades for much of the military's transportation equipment. Most soldiers today are using equipment that should have been replaced a decade ago, some military analysts said.

In recent years, the Canadian military has often been forced to rely on foreign and commercial equipment to transport its troops to global conflicts and emergencies. Critics often point to the December 2004 tsunami that struck Southeast Asia, when it took 12 days for the Canadian disaster relief team to secure transportation to the region.

"With a strategic airlift capacity of our own, we will no longer have to borrow from our allies or contract commercial aircraft, two options that come with strings attached," Defense Minister Gordon O'Connor told reporters on Thursday.

The new equipment includes 2,300 trucks, 16 medium-lift helicopters, 17 planes to transport troops and four equipment cargo planes that are set to begin arriving in the next two years. Three new joint support ships will be ready beginning in 2012. The four equipment cargo planes will be able to transport troops and heavy equipment anywhere in the world, something Canada's military has not been capable of in recent years, O'Connor said.

Much of the $15.3 billion will be spent on the new vehicles in the next five years, though the plan does include more than $6 billion for maintenance over the next 20 years. NYT

US threatens to cut aid to Nepal over rebel arms

KATMANDU, NEPAL—THE UNITED States has warned it will cut off millions of dollars in annual aid to Nepal if communist rebels join the country's proposed interim government without first giving up their weapons.

"If the Maoists continue to use violence after they enter the government, our law says that we can't supply assistance to those who support a terrorist group. We have to consider them a consider a terrorist group until they give up arms," said US Ambassador to Nepal James F. Moriarty.

Moriarty's remarks came after he met with Prime Minister Girija Prasad Koirala on Saturday before leaving for Washington.

The US provides Nepal with $45 million a year in development, education and health aid.

In the past, the US has given Nepal's government millions of dollars in military aid to fight the Maoists rebels, but suspended it after King Gyanendra seized absolute power last year.

The communists' leader criticized Moriarty's stance.

"I am not surprised with the comments by the ambassador to Nepal, because he does not want peace in Nepal," said Prachanda, who goes by a single name.

"He seems very unhappy and restless over the political development, and is trying to dismantle the harmony that is about to develop among the political parties."

The rebels, who have waged a decade-long war to seize control of the Himalayan nation, have announced that they're joining an interim government to be formed along with main political parties.

The rebels had supported weeks of massive street protests and a general strike organized by an alliance of seven major political parties in April that forced King Gyanendra to relinquish the absolute power he'd seized in early 2005. AP

Liechtenstein aims to clean up image as shady financial haven

VADUZ, LIECHTENSTEIN—THE cutting edge architecture of a string of brand-new banks might seem incongruous in a village topped off with a medieval castle.

But Liechtenstein—with 34,600 residents in an area a little over double the size of Manhattan—is no ordinary corner of Europe.

The nation sandwiched between Austria and Switzerland gained what fame it has as a banking and financial services center, a place where ill-gotten assets could be safely stashed away and no one would ask questions.

Now the regulations have changed—and it's time the rest of the world took notice of the efforts the country is making, says the ruling Prince Alois von und zu Liechtenstein.

"I think it was rightly a major problem that the outside world found with Liechtenstein," said Alois, who has sweeping powers—including the right to dismiss governments, veto new laws and cast the deciding vote on the appointment of new judges.

But now, Liechtenstein has strong regulations to effectively fight money laundering and terrorism funding, he said.

Europe's fourth-smallest sovereign state got rich on its status as an offshore tax haven, with strict rules on banking secrecy. Almost a third of its gross domestic product of 4.2 billion Swiss francs (US$3.4 billion; euro 2.71 billion) comes from financial services, including banking.

But come the end of the 20th century, the rest of the world was getting annoyed with its role in international crime and, potentially, terrorism financing.

In 2000, both the G-8 group of leading industrialized nations and the 26-nation Financial Action Task Force put Liechtenstein on their blacklist of nations deemed uncooperative in fighting money laundering. The principality scrambled to revise its laws, and a year later was believed to be removed from the blacklist.

Almost simultaneously, the Paris-based Organization for Economic Cooperation and Development included Liechtenstein on a separate blacklist of "uncooperative tax havens."

"The main reason countries were angry was we had very bad implementation," says Alois, appearing relaxed in one of his castle's state rooms. "Our system of giving legal aid (to other countries) was very poor."

Being on the blacklists spurred the Liechtenstein authorities into action. Since then, new laws have been passed to tighten regulations, more judges and lawyers have been brought in to supervise and regulate the financial institutions and a financial intelligence unit set up to watch for wrongdoers. In 2001, the country was removed from the money-laundering list.

"After 2001, the complete legal framework changed," says Michael Lauber, chief executive of the Liechtenstein Bankers' Association.

Liechtenstein is still on the tax-haven blacklist, but is lobbying to have its name removed. "This is based on old info," Lauber says.

Grace Perez-Navarro, a tax haven specialist with the OECD, said Liechtenstein remains on the list of uncooperative tax havens "because, unlike 33 other jurisdictions, it has not made a commitment to the OECD to improve transparency and to establish effective exchange of information for tax purposes with OECD countries."

As in neighboring Switzerland, tax evasion is not a crime in Liechtenstein. The country does not provide legal assistance to other countries investigating alleged tax evasion and also wants to maintain as much of its banking secrecy as possible. AP

Hong Kong pro-freedom march draws over 20,000

HONG KONG—MORE THAN 20,000 Hong Kong residents took to the streets Saturday to demand full democracy for the former British colony, on the ninth anniversary of its handover to China.

Carrying banners that read "Justice, Equality, Democracy, Hope," the protesters flooded out of the gates of Victoria Park in the city center, bound for downtown government offices some 3 km away.

To beating drums, they shouted "We Want Universal Suffrage" and waved colorful placards that read "When will we have a timetable for universal suffrage?" Protesters representing teachers and other workers as well as anti-racism, animal rights and harbor protection groups were also at the rally.

Police estimated that the turnout was about 28,000, while organizers said 58,000 marched, more than last year's 20,000 people.

Amid fading calls for democracy nine years after the 1997 handover, activists hoped the appearance of retired deputy leader secretary Anson Chan would reignite their once-formidable campaign for universal suffrage. AFP

China opens rail link to remote Tibet

BEIJING—THIS WEEKEND, CHINA opened the world's highest railway, a 710-mile line that crosses the vertiginous Tibetan Plateau and forges a steel bond with the once-secluded Buddhist holy city of Lhasa.

The railway, inaugurated on Saturday by President Hu Jintao and top Communist Party cadres on a deluxe opening run, is an engineering marvel that traverses unstable permafrost and reaches more than 16,000 feet above sea level.

Party officials have hailed the $4.1-billion project, which was decades in the making, as a milestone in its efforts to develop its vast, poor western region and bring an infusion of people and prosperity to remote Tibet.

But Tibetan and foreign critics say that the railway benefits Han Chinese, China's dominant ethnic group, at the expense of Tibetan natives. NYT

Osama accuses Iraq Shiites of Sunni genocide

ANDRE Whyte, left, father of Marine Lance Cpl. Nicholas J. Whyte helps hold up Annette Whyte, center, as she places a flower on her son's casket during a burial ceremony at Long Island June 30. Whyte, 21, of Brooklyn, died June 21 after being hit by sniper fire while on patrol in Ramadi, Iraq.

PARIS—AL-QAIDA LEADER Osama bin Laden accused Iraqi Shiites of waging "genocide" against Sunnis and warned of retaliation, according to a new audiotape posted on the Internet.

The message, the second in as many days purportedly from the Western world's most wanted man, came as yet another sectarian car bombing shook Baghdad, killing 66 people in one of the worst attacks this year.

A White House official said the message, if authenticated by US intelligence services, reflected al-Qaida's "dark vision" and shows that Bin Laden and his supporters "offer nothing beyond further fighting, conflict and misery."

The speaker in the audio message posted on Saturday also warned against deploying international forces in lawless Somalia and expressed backing for Islamist forces there.

The voice said Iraqi Sunnis, once dominant under the ousted regime of Saddam Hussein, were being subjected to "a campaign of genocide at the hands of the gangs of grudge and treachery," a reference to Shiites.

The speaker warned that Iraqi Shiites could therefore expect retribution.

"It is not possible that many of the people of the south (who are predominantly Shiites) join America and its allies in attacking (the Sunni bastions of) Fallujah, Ramadi, Baquba, Mosul, Samarra, Al-Qaim and other cities and villages and (expect) their regions to be spared a reaction and harm," he said.

The recording emerged on the same day that a group calling itself "the Supporters of the Sunni Community" claimed a devastating Baghdad car bombing that killed at least 66 people in a Shiite neighborhood, saying it was in retaliation for Shiite attacks on Sunnis.

The voice on the tape also accused the government of Prime Minister Nuri al-Maliki, a Shiite, of being "treacherous and apostate."

"The first step required to bring stability to Iraq is to drive out the crusader armies by force, then to punish the leaders of (Shiite) parties" who "lied to the people by telling them that participation in the political process is the way to drive out the occupiers," he added.

The speaker attacked Iraq's Sunni vice president Tareq al-Hashemi, lumping him with Shiite leaders allegedly deceiving the Iraqi people.

The voice on the tape also endorsed the choice of Abu Hamza al-Muhajer as head of al-Qaida's Iraq branch as successor to Abu Musab al-Zarqawi, who was killed in a US air strike June 7.

"I pray God Almighty that he will be the best successor to the best predecessor ... and I recommend to him to focus his fight on the Americans and those who support them," the message added.

The new statement was posted after the CIA authenticated a message by the fugitive al-Qaida leader released on Friday in which he said that jihad, or holy war, would go on in Iraq despite Zarqawi's killing.

The speaker went on to slam Yemeni President Ali Abdullah Saleh as an "American agent" and urged Somalis to reject his mediation.

"I warn against the tricks of the infidels... such as Ali Abdullah Saleh's invitation to you and your adversaries to conduct a dialogue in Sanaa," the speaker said. "He is an obedient American agent." The speaker vowed that his supporters would fight any US or international forces sent to Somalia and reserved the right to punish any countries that provided such forces on their own soil "and anywhere possible."

He appealed to Somalis to back Islamic court forces who took the capital Mogadishu from a US-backed warlord alliance on June 5 and are now led by a cleric accused by Washington of having ties to al-Qaida.

Bird flu tends to kill youth, as shown by 1918 epidemic—WHO AVIAN FLU TENDS TO KILL younger people, much as the 1918 Spanish flu epidemic did, the World Health Organization said Friday as it released an analysis of more than 200 cases.

Deaths from the disease surged in the winter for the last three years, the report said, so a rise in fatal cases can be expected late this year even if the virus does not mutate into a form more easily transmitted.

Moreover, the report warned, the risk of the virus becoming more transmissible remains high "because of the widespread distribution of the H5N1 virus in poultry and the continued exposure of humans."

The median age of victims with confirmed cases was 20 years, the report said. The highest death rate—73 percent—was among patients aged 10 to 19, while the overall fatality rate was 56 percent.

A high death rate among young adults echoes the pattern found in the 1918-1919 epidemic, said Dr. Michael T. Osterholm, director of the Center for Infectious Disease Research and Policy at the University of Minnesota. Scientists contend that year's H1N1 virus was also an avian flu that mutated until it spread easily among humans; although it was fatal to only about 2 percent of those who caught it, that was enough to kill between 40 million and 100 million people worldwide.

When the second wave of the Spanish flu struck Boston in the fall of 1918, Osterholm said, the flu death rate among people ages 18 to 30, which had been about 30 per 100,000 people in previous years, soared to 5,700 per 100,000.

The annual flu, by contrast, tends to kill the very young and the very old, often from secondary bacterial pneumonia.

In the Asian and Middle Eastern countries where the disease is most pervasive, people of all ages are exposed to chickens, but 90 percent of the cases have been in people under 40, so something in young adults must make them more susceptible.

Evidence suggests that many young people in 1918 and quite a few in this outbreak are killed by a "cytokine storm"—the body's own immune reaction, which floods the lungs with fluid. Young adults generally have strong immune systems.

People over 50 have the lowest death rate, but it is still 18 percent, which is a huge impact compared with seasonal flu. NYT

Israel bombs Palestinian PM's office

Says it will use all means to have soldier released

GAZA CITY—AN ISRAELI AIR RAID struck the Gaza office of Palestinian prime minister Ismail Haniya early Sunday, ratcheting up the pressure to free a captured Israeli soldier even as mediation talks continued.

Haniya, who was not present at the time of the raid, swiftly condemned the attack, which set his office ablaze in a dramatic warning to the Hamas government following multiple Israeli threats against their leadership.

"It's an attack against a Palestinian symbol. We ask the international community and the Arab League to take its responsibilities towards our people and intervene" to end what he called Israel's "insane policy" he said.

Witnesses said at least one missile struck Haniya's office shortly before 2:00 a.m., sparking a blaze nevertheless swiftly doused by a team of Palestinian firefighters.

A second near-simultaneous air strike in the northern Gaza strip town of Jabaliya killed a member of the armed wing of Haniya's Hamas movement and wounded another, marking a fifth straight night of Israeli air raids on Gaza.

Israel has repeatedly threatened to target Haniya following the capture on June 25 of an Israeli soldier by three Palestinian militant groups, including the armed wing of the premier's Islamist Hamas movement.

The Israeli military confirmed it carried out an air strike on Haniya's office and another two targeting Hamas infrastructure in Gaza, saying the Israel Defense Forces would use "all means" to secure the soldier's release.

"There was an aerial attack on the office of Ismail Haniya, prime minister. The IDF holds the Palestinian Authority and the Hamas government responsible for the recent attack on the soldier and his fate," a spokesperson told reporters.

"The IDF will continue to employ all means at its disposal against Palestinian terrorist infrastructure in the Gaza Strip to allow the unconditional return of Corporal Gilad Shalit," she added.

The Israeli military confirmed another two air strikes against Hamas outposts in the Gaza refugee camp of Jabaliya where "several terrorists were present at the time planning terrorist attacks against Israel." A Palestinian security official said one of the attacks targeted a school run by the Islamist movement, which operates a powerful social welfare wing in the impoverished Gaza Strip. The Israeli military denied a school was hit.

A senior official from Palestinian leader Mahmud Abbas' office had warned Saturday that Haniya's life could be on the line if a solution was not reached soon allowing the release of the 19-year-old Israeli corporal, Gilad Shalit.

"His life is at risk if the Palestinian groups do not free the Israeli soldier," a high-ranking official said on condition of anonymity.

Israel squeezes ordinary Gaza citizens, who turn to Hamas

By Ian Fisher

GAZA CITY, GAZA STRIP—OMAR Areny's wife had left their 11th-floor apartment here only once in three days. When the power is out—which is often since the Israeli military knocked out nearly half of Gaza's power supply on Wednesday—that means a long climb up the stairs.

"It's a prison but there are no guards," said Omar Areny, 40, waiting for the power to return as Israeli artillery shells thudded nearby on Friday. "You are obliged to stay in your house."

No electricity means not only no elevators, but also less water, refrigeration and air conditioning in mid-summer. The Israeli military campaign in Gaza—aimed at forcing the release of a captured Israeli soldier—has come with other problems: The closed borders have locked out fuel, which has nearly run dry, and food. The sonic booms set off by Israeli jets in the night terrify the Arenys' four children.

Even after years of fighting, Omar Areny said, Israel had again misunderstood the Palestinian mind.

He and others here believe the military campaign is aimed less at fighters than at making Palestinian lives so miserable that they turn against their government, which is now run by the militant group Hamas. Hamas' military wing led the attack into Israel last Sunday in which the soldier was captured.

"I don't like the government, but in these circumstances I will support it," said Areny, a member of Fatah, Hamas' rival. "I cannot stand with the Israelis against our people."

Nearly a week after the attack in which the Israeli soldier was taken, the Israeli military operation has not yet created a full-blown crisis for the 1.3 million people who live in the already poor and violent Gaza Strip.

But aid groups worry that one could come more quickly now than it might have under other circumstances. Gaza has already been squeezed financially—and civil servants like Areny not paid for four months—since Hamas took power in January elections and the West cut off financial aid.

"They are heading for the abyss unless they get electricity and fuel restored," Jan Egeland, the UN emergency coordinator, said. NYT

Do You Have Dyspepsia?

Parang tambol ang tiyan. May kabag. Masakit ang sikmura. If you frequently experience these symptoms, you may have a common stomach condition known as Dyspepsia.

What is Dyspepsia?

Dyspepsia is a recurring discomfort in the chest and stomach areas. Aside from bloating, gas and stomach pains, other symptoms include heavy stomach, fullness and nausea.

Dyspeptic symptoms usually appear when stomach movement slows down and food does not empty from the stomach. These symptoms often follow meals, but can occur anytime.

Treatment

Frequent remedies taken for Dyspepsia-like symptoms are drinks like tea, soft drinks or antacids. These remedies may relieve some, but not all of the symptoms of Dyspepsia.

A class of medication called Prokinetics can relieve Dyspeptic symptoms by restoring motility or normal stomach movement. Prokinetic drugs are what most doctors prescribe for Dyspepsia. The most prescribed Prokinetic drug is Domperidone, available in 10mg tablet form.

See Your Doctor

If symptoms persist, it is best to see your doctor. A Philippine Society of Gastroenterology (PSG) doctor will recommend the right treatment for Dyspepsia.

No breakthrough in WTO talks

GENEVA—WORLD TRADE ORGANIZATION (WTO) states failed yet again on Saturday to break a deadlock in global free trade negotiations but insisted the "round" was not dead.

Pronouncing the trade round in crisis, WTO chief Pascal Lamy said a deal could still be struck in the coming weeks before negotiators finally run out of time.

Major trade powers have agreed a more prominent role for Lamy in the increasingly desperate search for compromise in the near 5-year-old trade round, after two days of talks failed to heal a split over farm and industrial goods.

"We have clearly reached something of an impasse here. But does that mean the round is dead? No. We have no intention of giving up hope," US Trade Representative Susan Schwab told a news conference.

Despite warnings by Lamy that the future of the round hung by a thread, top trading powers were unable to agree on how far rich nations should slash farm subsidies and tariffs and developing countries open their manufacturing markets.

"There has been no progress, therefore we are in a crisis," Lamy said. "But the sense is that it remains doable." Without a deal this weekend, Lamy had said the WTO could run out of time to finish the Doha round, which also covers complex issues such as services, by the end of the year, which is the absolute cut-off.

Calling the meeting neither a "success nor a disaster," European Union trade chief Peter Mandelson said earlier that a breakthrough must come before the end of July.

Heads of government of the so-called G6—Australia, Brazil, India, Japan, the EU and the United States—which has been taking the lead in negotiations, could soon meet, possibly at the G8 summit later this month in St Petersburg.

The talks stalled late on Friday at the end of the first of an originally scheduled three days of negotiations between ministers from some 60 WTO states who had hoped to settle the core issues that are delaying progress on the overall round.

Developing countries said they would not let rich nations negotiate away the primary purpose of the Doha round—to give economic opportunities to millions living in poverty.

"We are not here to bend backwards to accommodate more market access for industrialized nations. We are not going to allow ourselves to be blamed for any failure," said Zambian Trade Minister Dipak Patel.

The talks pit the European Union and the United States against each other and against leading developing states.

Despite the paralysis, some diplomats talked of a "managed crisis." Few saw the end-June meeting as the moment of truth. Reuters

Giants, Bulls seal 2nd title clash

By June Navarro

PUREFOODS TOOK THE HARDER ROUTE BUT finished off Alaska with the same flair it displayed years ago to reach the finals of the Gran Matador Brandy PBA Philippine Cup last night.

Noy Castillo's drive off Tony dela Cruz with 13.4 seconds left allowed the Giants to preserve their game-long brilliance with a thrilling 90-89 win over the Aces in their Game 7 showdown at the Cuneta Astrodome.

"When we're down 1-3, almost everybody had written us off," said

Purefoods coach Ryan Gregorio after beating Alaska's Tim Cone in a best-of-seven series twice in a row. "But we just kept the faith and stayed together as a team."

Later in the night, Junthy Valenzuela nailed an open jumper with almost no time left to carry Red Bull to a pulsating 86-84 win over San Miguel Beer that set up a best-of-seven titular clash with the Giants.

It is the second straight title showdown for Red Bull and Purefoods with the Bulls prevailing over the Giants for the Fiesta Conference crown early this year.

Red Bull pulled off the winning play with 3.7 seconds left after Danny Seigle had tied the game at 84 with two free throws.

Rico Villanueva received the throw-in, passed it to Mick Pennisi, who found Valenzuela free.

"I don't know if there was any game in the history of the PBA like this," said Red Bull coach Yeng Guiao after the Bulls won another Game 7 for the third time in franchise history.

"The way it was fashioned out was really mind-boggling. Give the guys credit. We wouldn't be here if not for their mental toughness."

It will be the ninth championship stint for Guiao and the fifth for the Bulls, who will be in their first All-Filipino title series.

"I haven't thought about Purefoods yet but I'm sure they want to get back at us," said Guiao.

As in the 2002 Governors Cup, the Giants overcame a 0-2 deficit and captured the title over Alaska in the seventh and last game.

The only difference this time was Gregorio and his troops needed to sweep the series' last three games.

"It was a great display of character," said Gregorio after booking a return ticket to the championship for the second straight conference. "This team played with so much energy, and now that we're in the finals, we want to go all the way."

Gregorio and the Giants lost last conference's Fiesta Cup to Red Bull.

Kerby Raymundo sizzled in the final half by scoring 15 of his 25 points on top of 13 boards but he committed a costly turnover late in the rally that had the Aces storming back from 19 points down.

PUREFOODS' Richard Yee (9) tries to wiggle out of an Alaska double team set up by Mike Cortez and Sonny Thoss in yesterday's game.

Amonsot, 3 other locals punish Mexican rivals

By Salven L. Lagumbay, Contributor

CZAR AMONSOT AND THREE other local fighters gave Philippine boxing more reasons to celebrate Manny Pacquiao's big win over Mexican Oscar Larios yesterday.

The four Filipinos in the undercard all pulled through against their respective Mexican rivals to set up a sweep for the hosts in what was billed as the Mano-A-Mano Filipinas Contra Mexico showdown capped by the Pacquiao-Larios clash at the Araneta Coliseum.

Amonsot, the reigning WBO Asia Pacific super featherweight champ, bucked a slow start to prevail by unanimous decision over gutsy Mexican Silverio Ortiz in the 10-round main supporting event.

The fighter from Tagbilaran City, who was almost pulled out of the card due to a fever that slowed him down in training, caught Ortiz with several wicked jabs and uppercuts.

The judges favored Amonsot, a last-minute replacement for Randy Suico, with scores of 98-92, 99-91, and 100-91.

"I was just trying to fight a smart fight, and did not allow him to impose his fighting style on me," said Amonsot in Cebuano after the fight.

Philippine bantamweight champ Michael Domingo, also a late substitute for the popular

Rey "Boom Boom" Bautista, also shone with a seventh-round stoppage of Mexican Alejandro Felix Montiel.

Domingo scored a knockdown in the first round with a big right, and continued to dominate until the bout was stopped at 1:04 of the seventh following several unanswered shots by the winner.

Former WBC superfly champ Gerry Peñalosa and Jimrex Jaca won in contrasting fashions.

Peñalosa decisioned a tough Tomas Rojas, bucking a cut on his left eyelid. The judges saw him winning at 98-92, 96-93 and 98-92.

Jaca prevailed on a seventh-round technical decision over Hector Marquez after the fight was halted at 2:08 of the round with Jaca bleeding profusely from an old left eye wound following a collision of heads in the first round.

All three judges had Jaca ahead 60-53 when the fight was stopped.

Ex-OPBF lightweight champ Dennis Laurente scored a unanimous decision win over Russian Rustam Nugayev, who is a regular sparring partner of Pacquiao.

In other bouts, Jeroppe Mercado decisioned Glenn Porras of Kidapawan City; Jundy Maraon and Ernel Fontanilla fought to a technical draw; Dodie Boy Agrabio upset Roel Laguna with a split verdict; while Richie Mepranum and Efrén Huesca figured in a majority draw.

Zidane produces a masterpiece against the masters

FRANKFURT, GERMANY—ZINEDINE Zidane is now one game away from the World Cup final and the end of his competitive soccer career.

The aging playmaker is not ready to retire just yet, if Saturday's masterful performance is anything to go by.

"We're in the semifinals. We're really happy and we're going to try and get that place in the final," Zidane said. "We don't want to stop here."

Zidane, aged 34, produced a stunning performance to again punish Brazil, just like he did eight years ago when he headed two goals to lead Les Bleus to its first World Cup title.

"We had to produce a massive performance and that's what we've done," Zidane said. "What was most important was to keep going physically. Once again, we deserved our victory."

His dangerous curling free-kick enabled Thierry Henry to fire in France's winner from close range in the 57th minute.

After France's quarterfinal loss to Greece at the 2004 European Championships, Zidane bowed out from international soccer only to return a year later for one last crack at the World Cup.

Zidane will retire for good either after the semifinal against Portugal or the final. His mind is firmly fixed on the July 9 final.

Sidney Govou, who watched Zidane's wonderful performance from the bench until he came on as a late substitute, sat back and enjoyed the show.

"As soon as he touched the ball tonight I knew he was going to have one of those matches," Govou said about Zidane. "It's not really surprising when you consider he's one of the top players in the world."

France boots out Brazil

Forges semifinal date vs England-beater Portugal

BERLIN—BRAZIL WAS dumped out of the World Cup on Saturday, a Thierry Henry goal giving France a 1-0 quarterfinal victory over the defending champion.

France faces a semifinal with Portugal, which triumphed, 3-1, over England in a penalty shootout after a goalless 120 minutes. England played most of the second half and all of extra time with 10 men after striker Wayne Rooney was sent off.

France, inspired by captain Zinedine Zidane who is retiring after this World Cup, outplayed the champions in Frankfurt.

Zidane floated a deep free kick from the left into the Brazilian penalty area after 57 minutes and striker Henry arrived unmarked at the far post to score.

"We don't want to stop now. This is so beautiful, we want it to carry on," said Zidane, 34.

In Paris, hordes of French fans descended on the Champs Elysees shouting "We have won! We have won!"

The victory completed a memorable World Cup double for France, as they also beat Brazil in the 1998 final.

Despite boasting a dazzling array of top Europe-based players, five-time champions Brazil never reached their full potential in Germany.

"We didn't think we would leave before the final but we have to face it," said Brazil coach Carlos Alberto Parreira.

FRANCE'S Thierry Henry (right) scores his side's first goal as Brazil goalkeeper Dida fails to make a save.

"France played very well, they were more patient and their victory was a deserved one," he added. "We had talented players, we worked hard but there was something missing."

Brazil's departure means the tournament will have no South American side in the last four for the first time since 1982.

Germany and Italy contest the first semifinal in Dortmund on Tuesday while France plays Portugal in Munich on Wednesday.

Portugal is the only team in the semi-nals not to have won the World Cup.

Goalkeeper Ricardo was the hero of their win in Gelsenkirchen, saving three spot-kicks—a record for a World Cup shootout—from England midfielders Frank Lampard, Steven Gerrard and substitute Jamie Carragher.

Beckham surrenders English captaincy

BUHLERTAL—DAVID BECKHAM RESIGNED as England captain here Sunday following his side's World Cup quarterfinal exit to Portugal.

Beckham was close to tears as he read from a prepared statement at England's training camp in southern Germany to confirm his decision to step down.

He still hopes to continue as a player for England, but not as captain.

"On Nov. 15, 2000 Peter Taylor gave me the greatest honor of my career in making me the captain of England, fulfilling me childhood dream," said the Real Madrid star.

"Now, almost six years later, after being captain for 58 of my 95 caps, I feel the time is right to pass on the armband as we enter in a new era under Steve McClaren."

"It has been an honor and a privilege to have captained our country and I want to stress that I wish to continue to play for England and look forward to helping both the new captain and Steve McClaren in any way I can."

Figures compiled by Fifa on the World Cup website said Beckham has won 94 caps.

Tearful Agassi, other US stars tumble out

WILLIAMS REUTERS

WIMBLEDON, ENGLAND—FIRST, A TEARFUL Andre Agassi bowed out of Wimbledon for the final time.

Then, defending women's champion Venus Williams departed. Two-time finalist Andy Roddick soon joined them as light faded on Centre Court in a stunning day of upsets Saturday at the All England Club.

By the end of the first week, only one American was left in the men's and women's singles at Wimbledon—Shenay Perry, who is ranked 62nd and has advanced to the fourth round.

Playing in his 14th Wimbledon before retirement later this year, the 36-year-old Agassi couldn't keep up with the relentless power of 20-year-old Rafael Nadal and fell, 7-6 (5), 6-2, 6-4.

In a bigger surprise, three-time champion Williams fell to Jelena Jankovic of Serbia, 7-6 (8), 4-6, 6-4. With sister Serena out injured, there will be no Williams in the Wimbledon final for the first time since 1999. The sisters have won five of the last six titles.

"It definitely feels really weird," Venus said. Finally, third-seeded Roddick—runner-up the last two years to Roger Federer—was dumped in straight sets by Britain's Andy Murray, 7-6 (4), 6-4, 6-4.

Roddick served 21 aces but was outplayed by Murray, a 19-year-old Scotsman who has replaced Tim Henman as Britain's best hope of a first homegrown champion since Fred Perry in 1936.

Murray saved 11 of 12 break points and converted three out of 12 break points against Roddick. Murray also had 35 groundstroke winners, nearly twice as many as Roddick.

Roddick's ouster means no US men have reached the fourth round for only the second time since 1922. The other time was in 2002. American men are used to struggling on clay at the French Open, but not on the grass at Wimbledon.

"It is a lot more surprising, disappointing when it is here, a place that we've all had a lot of success," Roddick said.

The defeat continued Roddick's slide since reaching last year's Wimbledon final. He lost in the first round of the US Open, the fourth round in Australia and retired with an ankle injury in the first round of the French.

"There's just that intangible quality right now, that edge that's not there," he said. "That's what I'm searching for."

Murray, meanwhile, is enjoying his first trip to the fourth round of a Grand Slam.

"I'm not used to being around the locker room when there's only 16 people left," he said. "It's much quieter."

For one last time, Agassi stood in the middle of the court after the match and blew kisses and bowed to all corners of the arena. Then, in a break with Wimbledon tradition, he addressed the crowd by microphone to say goodbye.

"It's been a lot of incredible years here," Agassi said, wiping away tears. "I'll never be able to repay you for how you've embraced me over the years and I thank you for that."

Then Agassi took his bag, stopped to sign a few autographs and gave a final wave as he walked off the most famous court in tennis.

Among those in the crowd was his wife, Steffi Graf, a seven-time Wimbledon champion who sat in the Royal Box along with other tournament winners and sports champions.

"It's been a privilege to be out there again for one last time," Agassi said.

ACE LENS MAN DE LEON 'SPARS' WITH PACQUIAO

After putting behind his cameras lens the likes of Sharon Cuneta, Kris Aquino, Regine Velasquez, Maricel Soriano, Cesar Montano and a host of other luminaries in show biz, society and politics, ace photographer Jun de Leon thought he had his fill of celebrity.

But that was before de Leon received an on-location assignment from San Miguel Corporation to capture in pictures Filipino boxing icon Manny Pacquiao, before and during the Pac Man's much-awaited title fight against Mexican Oscar "Chololo" Larrios at the Big Dome. Through the sponsorship of San Miguel Corporation, Jun packed his camera bags last month for the Pacquiao training camp in Los Angeles, California to photograph the "People's Champion" in training as well as capture that kind of stuff winners are made of.

These very exclusive, never-before-seen photos will be featured in the Philippine Daily Inquirer on July 3, day after the fight - a rarity in local of photo journalism. Plans are also afoot to mount an exhibit of these pictures.

"Ibang klase talaga si Manny," Jun relates, noting how his entrance in a busy public place like a restaurant would make the whole room quiet and pay heed to his presence. "It gives me goose bumps, feeling so proud that now a Filipino is able to do that," de Leon says.

With a reputation for being a perfectionist and a stickler to schedules, Jun got a dose of his own medicine following Manny in a straight eight-day sojourn of the boxer's training regimen. For one Pacquiao starts his day in a 5 a.m., two-hour run of the hills of L.A. which means de Leon had to wake up at least an hour earlier to prepare his camera, lenses and photographer's thingamajigs.

Obviously, the photographer with, or even without his gear, can't keep up with Pacquiao's killer pace on the road. Poor Jun had to tie himself up to the car just to capture the precise angle of Manny on his daily roadwork.

And there's the food. After a few days of partaking of Pacquiao's spartan breakfast of bananas and nilagang baka (tough litid and supposedly to add exercise Pacquiao's jaws), Jun lamented in jest: "Manny, pakainin mo naman kami nang manyosi!"

But the whole photo shoot was all worth it, Jun concludes. To this day he continues to take photos of Manny whose management company MP Promotions has designated de Leon as the official photographer of Pacquiao. In fact, in the Pacquiao-Larrios fight this Sunday, Jun will be the only photographer who will be allowed to go up the ring.

American riders start strong at Tour de France

STRASBOURG, FRANCE—AMERICAN RIDERS made a strong start to the post-Lance Armstrong era Saturday at the Tour de France, cycling's premier race blown wide open a day before by the expulsion of its top contenders in a doping scandal. George Hincapie lost by a split second in the opening time trial to big Norwegian sprinter Thor Hushovd, David Zabriskie placed third and Floyd Landis was ninth, making the United States the only country with three racers in the top 10. The Tour was still reeling from the previous day, when 1997 winner Jan Ullrich and Tour of Italy champion Ivan Basso were among nine riders sent home for suspected doping. It was the biggest drugs scandal to hit the sport in years, perhaps ever. Hincapie, Landis and Levi Leipheimer, another American who was 36th in Saturday's race against the clock over 7.1 kilometers (4.4 miles), find their chances of succeeding Armstrong enhanced now that the top four runners-up from last year—Basso, Ullrich, Francisco Mancebo and Alexandre Vinokourov—are out. Hincapie, long Armstrong's loyal lieutenant who rode with him on all of his record seven straight victories, now finds himself dreaming of a Tour title of his own.

Benitez-Alvarez Shell karting rivalry moves to Boomland

THE RIVALRY BETWEEN TOP JUNIOR KARTERS Javi Benitez of Jet Racing and John Alvarez of the Cebu Racing Group moves up a notch higher as the 2006 Shell Superkarting Series moves to the Boomland Kart Track at the CCP Complex this Sunday.

After conspiring to give the Philippines the Asian Karting Junior ROK crown last month, Benitez and Alvarez part ways again, this time with Benitez gunning for a second win following his triumph in the Asian karting event.

Benitez leads the hunt for the Junior ROK plum of this series sanctioned by the Automobile Association Philippines and sponsored by Shell Helix, San Miguel Corp., Denso Iridium Power, Honda Phils. Eastway Company, Aeromed Ambulance Transport and official tires Yokohama Kart Tires.

Alvarez, who pivoted Benitez' title-clinching feat in the Asian race by distracting foreign rivals, topped the previous leg at the Carmona Circuit Phils. track.

Expected to challenge Benitez and Alvarez are Tomas Cabili, Roby Benito, Juha Turalba and Paco Rodriguez.

The Dawn does Alaxan in new Sipag Campaign

Alaxan, the country's No. 1 pain killer, has tapped the talents of no less than The Dawn, arguably the country's most popular rock band during the 80's and one of its most enduring, to render a new anthem advocating the value of sipag or hard work as the key to success. The song was recently introduced on the airwaves as the vehicle to carry Alaxan's new campaign advocating sipag as embodied by the nation's now world-famous and most successful boxer to date, Manny Pacquiao. Inspiring and distinctly The Dawn in sound, the piece couldn't have been more timely, as this year marks the band's 20th anniversary. The song will thus have the honor of being part of The Dawn's commemorative album due out this July or August.

NOW ON ITS SECOND YEAR:

Alaxan's Alis-Aray sa Hanapbuhay

In its continuing effort to enlighten the working public on pain management, Alaxan has been conducting symposia and sponsoring medical missions to various industrial parks and offices all over the country. The response has thus far been very encouraging, and Alaxan hopes to reach out to even more areas and people in the future.

Alaxan's Alis-Aray symposia help workers know more about body pain.

Ambasa, Maningkil top GenSan Milo run

GEN. SANTOS CITY—MONALISA AMBASA embellished her reputation as one of Mindanao's best runners yesterday with an easy victory in the eighth leg of the 30th National Milo Marathon.

As if in a hurry to watch illustrious townmate Manny Pacquiao's fight against Mexican Oscar Larios, the 23-year-old Ambasa, a part-time clerk, took the lead early and stormed to her fourth straight win.

She annexed her sixth title in the fabled event—counting her two victories in the Davao leg during her school days at the Rizal Memorial College in Davao City—with a career-best time of 1 hour 27 minutes and 9 seconds.

Second placer Vivian Avergonzando finished almost 15 minutes behind while Raquel Velasco settled for third in the race that started and wound up in the city's Oval Plaza.

"I'm in shape this time," said the 5-foot runner from Surallah, South Cotabato. She plans to train rigorously this time for the National Finals set in December in Manila.

Wilson Maningkil topped the men's side with a blistering run in the final five kilometers that relegated Rey Mondonedo to runner-up honors for the second straight year.

The second placer in last year's Tarlac leg, Maningkil trailed Mondonedo in the first 10 kilometers before making his move halfway through the grueling race.

Ambasa and Maningkil received P10,000 each from Milo sports executive Pat Goc-ong, who was assisted in the awards rites by race director Rudy Biscocho.

Mondonedo and Avergonzando pocketed P6,000 each while Alem Ceralvo took P4,000 for finishing third like Velasco in the event held in partnership with Bayview Park Hotel-Manila, Adidas, Cebu Pacific, Powerbar and the Department of Tourism.

The top three finishers in both the men's and women's races earned outright slots in the finals.

John Brana ruled the 5K side over runner-up Anthony Tupas and third placer Jaman Makasaehe, while Marieth Delima topped the distaff side over Jullibee Gumera and Fe Concepcion.

Lady Archers post V-League crown sweep

By Marc Anthony Reyes

ON A DAY MANNY PACQUIAO COULD only win by decision, it was La Salle which scored a knockout.

A few kilometers away from the Big Dome, where the Filipino ring hero failed to deliver his KO promise against Mexican Oscar Larios, La Salle flashed its finest form yet, surviving a jarring first-set blow to down San Sebastian, 18-25, 27-25, 25-23, 25-20, yesterday and capture the Shakey's V-League championship.

The win gave the Lady Archers a 2-0 sweep of the title series and their third straight conference title before a big crowd at the Blue Eagle Gym in Katipunan, Quezon City.

Manilla Santos scored eight of her team-high 26 points in the fourth set for La Salle, which survived another explosive effort from the big-hitting Thai Jaroensri Bualee of San Sebastian through sheer patience and teamwork.

"We came here expecting to win easily but San Sebastian performed well and pushed us to outdo ourselves," said La Salle mentor Ramil de Jesus. "In the end, it was our big heart that won it for us."

The Lady Archers played with little urgency in the first set, which Bualee dominated as La Salle's own Thai import, Jindarat Kanchana, hardly created a ripple.

But Kanchana and Santos took charge of the offense while Desiree Hernandez, Erica Llaguno, Relea Saet, Michelle Datuin and Shermaine Penana provided solid support as La Salle tied the match after an extension.

Bualee, who scattered 34 points, 31 of them on attacks, boosted the Lady Stags to a 17-12 lead in the third set.

San Sebastian came within three points of clinching the set but the Lady Archers, trailing 18-22, outscored the suddenly erratic Lady Stags, 8-1, to take a 2-1 set advantage.

Kanchana won the set for La Salle with an emphatic spike to an open field before dropping to the floor in exhaustion.

But the fourth set belonged to Santos—the Most Improved Player awardee—who struck hard from the left post on Saet's feeds.

La Salle grabbed a 22-17 lead before SSC clawed back with three straight points. But Bualee blew a serve, Kanchana came through with a block, and SSC's Jinni Mondejar ended it all with another spike.

Cherry Rose Macatangay, the 5-foot-11 Adamson star, ran away with the Most Valuable Player and Best Scorer awards.

La Salle had four players in the honor roll.

Aside from Santos, skipper Desiree Hernandez took the Best Attacker plum, Relea Saet the Best Setter award and Shermaine Penana the Best Receiver title.

Ateneo's Michelle Laborte was adjudged Best Blocker, Lyceum's Concon Legaspi Best Server and SSC Margarita Pepito Best Digger.

Meralco, Robinsons shuttlers gain semis

DEFENDING CHAMPION Philippine Star thumped Accenture, 5-0, yesterday to advance to the semifinals of the P1 million JVC Open Badminton Championships' corporate division at the Glorietta Activity Center.

AB Leisure, Meralco and Robinson's Land also bagged slots in the Final Four after hammering separate foes with similar one-sided wins.

The AB Leisure shuttlers posted a 5-0 rout of Fortune Tobacco, while Meralco and Robinson's Land clinched their respective matches with Makati Medical Center and RCBC by sweeping their first three pairings.

The four teams dispute the finals berths on Thursday along with the semifinal round of the elite category in the event sponsored for the sixth straight year by top electronics firm JVC (Phils.), Inc.

Hideyuki Takato, president and CEO of the sponsoring JVC (Phils.), Inc., and Makati City Mayor Jejomar Binay made the ceremonial serves along with officials of the JVC Phils., including general manager Kazue Salud, chair Faustino Salud, marketing manager Rachel Bacsal, and director Dennis Salud and the Asuncion siblings Kennie and Kennevic.

Jhona Magnaye and Glenn Padpad kicked off the defending champion Starmen's campaign in the quarters with a 21-19, 21-16 victory over JP Lagman and Elaine de Claro of Accenture in the first mixed doubles event before Chester Cordero and Jopet Sison trounced the men's doubles tandem of Alvin Moreno and Jojo Gatchalian, 21-5, 21-13.

Poor form sends Paragua tumbling out of Top 100

PARAGUA: Still No. 1

MARK PARAGUA KEPT HIS "SUPER GM" STATUS but crashed out of the world's Top 100 in the July Elo ratings released by the World Chess Federation, Fide, yesterday.

The 22-year-old Paragua lost 13 Elo points due to his sub-par form in the 37th Chess Olympiad in Turin, Italy, and dropped to No. 128—from 100th in June—in the world rankings with 2604.

Paragua manned the top board for the Philippine team that finished in 44th place, well below pre-tournament expectations. He scored 4.5 points in 11 games, winning twice, losing four times and drawing the rest of his matches.

Grandmaster Rogelio Antonio Jr., the top Filipino scorer in Turin with 7 points, gained 10.7 Elo points to raise his rating to 2550 and dislodge GM Eugene Torre at second spot in the rankings.

Torre, Asia's first GM, lost a point after the Olympiad and stood at 2543, still a fairly high rating despite his lack of international stints.

Rounding out the Top 10 were IM Rogelio Barce-nilla 2503, IM Joseph Sanchez 2466, IM Oliver Dimalding 2463, IM Idelfonso Datu 2457, IM Yves Rañola 2442, GM Nelson Mariano 2437 and IM Richard Bitoon 2433.

"Bawi na lang ako sa susunod na (I'll make up for it in the next) international tournament," said Paragua, the only Filipino to have breached the 2600 rating, the level commonly pegged in international chess circles as "super GM" territory. Marlon Bernardino, Contributor

CLEAN LIVING

WHAT DOES PROFESSIONAL BOXING contribute to the community? While it is true that pro boxing is violent and dangerous, and that even the most rigid safety measures don't guarantee protection against death in the ring, still one can say that it does afford an economic opportunity for a certain number of people who are born to bitter poverty, people who are exploited because of educational deficits.

Pro boxing provides them with a way out. Manny Pacquiao, the most written-about athlete in the history of Philippine sports—and the richest—is a good example.

Still, not everything went dandy for some Filipino boxers (and their managers) who fell prey to the improprieties committed by sleazy promoters. Pacquiao and former world champion Luisito Espinosa are among the victims of these boxing rip-offs.

As most everybody knows, the impoverished Espinosa is still awaiting the full payment of his purse from the local promoters who staged his title fight in Mindanao more than a decade ago. For his part, Pacquiao had to go to court in New York to claim his rightful share from the proceeds of the pay-per-view deal from his former handler, the glib-tongued Murad Muhammad. And, there's more.

Longtime international promoter and manager Jun Sarreal said that one of his former boxers, world-ranked and Philippine junior lightweight champion Tony Juma-oas, and himself were themselves victims of unscrupulous promoters many years ago.

"Juma-oas and I were not paid our purses," recalled Sarreal, only son of the late boxing im-pressario Lope "Papa" Sarreal and brother-in-law of the great Flash Elorde. "As a result, I even had to shoulder the full payment of the purse due my boxer because the promoter (a certain Mr. Flores) did not settle his obligations with us."

Jun Sarreal also claimed there was no surety bond, a requirement imposed by the sport's ruling body, the Games and Amusements Board, to protect the boxers and managers in cases of non-payment by the fight promoters.

In another incident, this time in Caracas, Venezuela, Sarreal said former world flyweight champ Bernabe Villacampo also had to seek payment from another sleazy promoter, a certain Rafito Cedeño.

Boxing used to be a sport I loved. But I have virtually walked away from it in recent years because I have to follow my conscience. I honestly felt the boxers were being exploited and I wanted no part of it. After many years of covering fights and fighters, rubbing elbows with many of its luminaries, acting as a many-time local and international boxing judge, I felt I could no longer justify my association with the sport. I've had enough.

UST GOLDIES CELEBRATE: Due to space constraints, I apologize to my esteemed friend, former Philippine Olympic Committee president retired Col. Julian Malonzo, and to the other surviving members of the 1946 UST Glowing Goldies for not being able to announce their diamond celebration scheduled yesterday at the Kamayan/Saisaki restaurant on EDSA. The University of Santo Tomas won the 1946 UAAP varsity basketball championship.

Among the members of the team were Dr. Jose Genato, elder brother of Olympian Antonio Genato; TRC Judge Felipe Tongco, Tito Eduque, Edward Dee, Demosthenes Nagtalon, Francisco Vestil, former Pampanga governor Francisco Nepomuceno, Antonio Castillejo, Ricardo Siajua, Ricardo Pineda, Malonso, Ramonito Campos and Antonio Martinez. The coach was the dean of Filipino coaches, Herminio "Hen" Silva while the moderator of athletics was a Spanish priest, Rev. Fr. Exceleso Garcia, O.P., who translated the Roman version of the missal from Latin to Filipino, the first of its kind.

Santo Tomas defeated Far Eastern U to win the 1946 UAAP championship. FEU was led by Luis Tabuena, the Araneta brothers, Manolet and Marciano; Dr. Benjamin Cruz, who later transferred to UST to finish his medical course; Jose "Peping" Gochangco, Virgilio "Baby" Dalupan, Jose Tuason, Cesar Burgos, Rafael Dimalanta and Manuel Piñon. The coach was Prof. Jose Rocha, FEU director of physical education and grandfather of actor Niño Muhlach.

Third place went to National University led by former Makati City Mayor Nemesio Yabut, Rafael Roco, Oscar Tafedo, Eduardo Mesina and Dr. Angelino Sunga. NU was mentored by Celerino Paguia Sr., husband of Letty Jhocson.

THE DIMINUTIVE aspirants on the ABS-CBN amateur singing contest "Little Big Star" proved that size didn't matter when it came to scaling musical heights.

The national grand finals were held on Wednesday and telecast Saturday.

In the Big division, crowd favorite and "Antoinette Taus" look-alike Angellie Urquico, 13, led the pack with a rendition of the Whitney Houston classic "Run to You." Runner-up was Krisssha Viaje, 12, who sang "Through the Rain."

In the Little category, seven-year-old Robert Villar wowed the crowd with his interpretation of the Regine Velasquez showstopper "Kailangan Ko'y Ikaw."

Robert's smile said it all when he was declared winner over closest rival Christian Olog, 9, who performed "Ikaw ang Lahat sa Akin."

The judges were comedienne Ai-Ai de las Alas, contest champs Mark Bautista and Erik Santos, Apo Hiking Society member Boboy Garrovillo and Star Records executive Jonathan Manalo.

Quick to comfort the runners-up was host Sarah Geronimo, who was celebrating her debut on the show (her actual birthday is July 25).

As role models go, for Angellie and Robert, Sarah is a tough and tireless (read: hard-working) act to follow. Bayani San Diego Jr.

For very special 'critics'

A SPECIAL ADVANCE screening of the movie "United 93" was held recently for the families of the victims of 9/11's fourth and last hijacked plane—so that they might be the movie's first critics, said British director, writer and co-producer Paul Greengrass.

United Airlines Flight 93 crashed into a field in rural Pennsylvania. The passengers and crew had fought back, throwing off the hijackers and preventing the plane from hitting its target, the Capitol dome in Washington, D.C.

The movie opens on Wednesday in major cities around the world, including Manila.

"It was very sad," said Cathy Stefani after seeing the movie. Her daughter Nicole was among the 40 passengers. "But it pretty much portrayed the truth as we know it."

Another group of 90 victims' relatives attended the premiere held shortly after at the Tribeca Film Festival in New York.

YOU BORN TODAY: You're a skilled communicator. People quickly understand you and respond to you. You love words and often write or keep a journal. Because you are so sensitive, you sometimes appear cavalier. You like people. Honesty is important to you. Expect to let go of something this year. It's time to create space for something new to enter your life.

Birthdate of: Betty Buckley, actress; Tom Cruise, actor; Shoshannah Stern, actress.

ARIES (March 21 to April 19): Pay attention to your personal relationships. Because loved ones and partners are more important to you today, make sure you don't respond to stuff with a knee-jerk reaction.

TAURUS (April 20 to May 20): You might want to devote time to home crafts and personal hygiene today. Because of this, it's a good day to work with children. Your relations with romantic interests are quite emotional now as well.

GEMINI (May 21 to June 20): You feel more active and nurturing toward others today. Because of this, it's a good day to work with children. Your relations with romantic interests are quite emotional now as well.

CANCER (June 21 to July 22): If you have any time for contemplation today, you'll appreciate this opportunity. (Memories from your childhood return to you, but now you can see things through your adult eyes.)

LEO (July 23 to Aug. 22): You're not satisfied with superficial conversations you have with others today. Especially siblings. You want to get right down to the nitty-gritty. You want to share some meaningful truth.

VIRGO (Aug. 23 to Sept. 22): You'll get pleasure by surrounding yourself with familiar objects today. For some reason, you feel more attached to what you own. You're not willing to part with something.

LIBRA (Sept. 23 to Oct. 22): Today the Moon is in your sign, which always makes you a bit more emotional than usual. You feel a greater need to be close to your loved ones. (Nothing wrong with that.)

SCORPIO (Oct. 23 to Nov. 21): You need more privacy today. (You are a private person.) Time spent in seclusion will restore and replenish you. Work alone if you can.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22 to Dec. 21): Conversations with others, a female friend in particular, are important today. You want to establish a trusting bond with someone. You want it to be an easy give and take.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22 to Jan. 19): People notice you today. Furthermore, discussions with parents, bosses and authority figures are significant. Be on your best behavior.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20 to Feb. 18): You're restless to do something different. You have a strong desire to break from routine or travel somewhere you've never been before. (Do something completely new.)

PISCES (Feb. 19 to March 20): Emotional encounters with others are quite intense today. Don't overreact. Possibly, you want something that somebody else has. This can put you (or anyone else) on edge.

Celebrities dance up a storm in ABC-5 program finals

AS WE EXPECTED, JOSHUA Zamora and his dancing partner Janeth won the "Wild Card" round of ABC-5's "Shall We Dance?" and thus got into the show's season finals last Sunday, June 25. They did well in the ultimate dance showdown, but text-voters decided that the winners should be Tirso Cruz III and his dance partner.

In second place were Mystika and her partner, followed by Joshua and Janeth, and Desiree del Valle and her dance partner settled for fourth place.

On point of actual excellence in performance, our list put the teams of Joshua and Mystika ahead, but the text-votes had the final say, so the point is moot and academic.

What was impressive about the season finals was the high level of competition. Gone are the days when celebrity dance competitions meant overweight, lazy and spoiled stars dancing a little and relying mostly on their popularity to get the fans rooting for them.

Last June 25, all four teams danced their hearts out, setting a daunting standard for the celebrities being lined up for the tilt's third season.

First season winner Angelika dela Cruz did an exhibition number, and it was instructive to note that she did less well than the Season Two's four finalists. This goes to show how much the show has improved in the interim.

Another highlight in last Sunday's show was the number performed by the competition's judges, Regine Tolentino, Edna Ledesma and Audie Gemora.

While Audie took the easy way out and sang for the most part, Regine and Edna danced up a tsunami that blew our socks off and showed us what competition ballroom dancing should really be about.

We trust that the point was not lost on the tilt's finalists, and inspired them to work even harder to come up to their jurors' level in the extremely challenging field of competition dancing.

VIEWFINDER

Nestor U. Torre

Program host Lucy Torres-Gomez should also be inspired to add more intensity, edge and oomph to her dance numbers. The one she performed last Sunday was an improvement over her characteristically sweet and soft dance routines in the past (and her costume was her most daring on the show to date), but she can do even better—and hotter.

A final note on the season finals: We wish the people behind the program would drop their "text-votes rule" mind-set for the ultimate dance showdown. As last Sunday's verdict went, viewers can't really be relied on to vote for the best dancers, because they vote more for popularity or nostalgia considerations.

This is unfair to the other, less popular finalists, who bust their guts trying to come up with their very best performances.

So, do bring the judges back for the season finals, so the finalists' best efforts can be more properly and fairly rewarded.

If popularity continues to hold sway, lesser celebrities would be discouraged from joining the competition in the future, because they wouldn't have the ghost of a chance to win viewer-voters' subjective nod.

Jamie Foxx

Channel [V] has chosen outstanding actor-singer Jamie Foxx as its star for the month—and with good reason. Foxx won an Oscar for his portrayal of Ray Charles in 2004's

"Ray," and he was also hailed as a multi-platinum seller for his hit album, "Unpredictable."

He's only the fourth artist in show biz history to have won an Oscar and have a No. 1 album, after Frank Sinatra, Bing Crosby and Barbra Streisand.

Video art

Visual Pond and the Power Plant Mall are calling for entries to the End Frame Video Art Project, the country's first video art festival. It runs from Sept. 6 to 10 at Power Plant, and from Sept. 12 to 16 at The Cubicle Art Gallery.

The project's international partner is The One Minutes, an organization based in The Netherlands that collects one-minute video artworks from all over the world. Visual Pond is collecting Philippine one minutes through End Frame to enter The One Minutes Awards in November.

Submission forms and detailed information are available at <http://endframe.visualpond.org>. Deadline for submission of entries is on Aug. 1.

All about Eva

Fans may know her only as Robin and Rustom's mom, but this strong-willed former actress has waged countless battles in and out of the household

BE FOREWARNED.

"I was called a strong woman by the press," says Eva Cariño, seemingly unperturbed by the description. "I was the original Annabelle Rama."

The feisty mom of Robin, Rustom, Rommel and Royette Padilla is referring to the equally feisty mother of Ruffa and Richard Gutierrez.

"Robin's detractors used to get to me. I actually sent out word: 'If I run into reporters who badmouth my sons, I'll clobber them with my bakya (wooden clogs).'"

But if it were her own sons that needed disciplining? "I'd run after them with a shotgun!"

The former actress explains that she was forced to become tough after her children's father, Camarines Norte Governor Roy Padilla, was assassinated in August 1988.

She recalls: "I couldn't just give up. I had eight children to raise. I had to be brave. When I say that, I don't mean hard-hearted, ha? I had no choice but to become resilient for my children. I couldn't show them that I was weak."

She admits that their lives were turned upside down when Robin followed in her show biz footsteps and ended up being touted as the Bad Boy of Philippine Movies.

"We were hit with intrigues left and right," she says.

The toughest test came when Robin and Rommel were jailed in the 1990s for illegal possession of firearms.

She looks back: "I had two sons in Muntinlupa. I couldn't sleep at night. What if there was a riot? What if the jail caught fire?"

The faint-hearted would've crumbled, but not Eva. Although, she admits, "If not for my faith in God, I would've gone crazy."

On her prison visits, she says, she would reprimand Robin, who had just converted to Islam, "Don't wear that head shroud in front of me. But later, I understood and accepted his decision to convert because I saw how it had changed him for the better."

Eva made the rounds of lawmakers' offices in both chambers of Congress to appeal her sons' cases because, she says, she was imprisoned based on an order of the court.

Jailed on August 29, 1991, she was released on April 17, 1998. Roy was in the same year.

Fearless 'provinciana'

She has been fearless in a

As a teenage girl in Iloilo, Cuyapo, Nueva Ecija, she was a movie star, top-billed by idols like Elsa Oria. She had thought of herself as a "typical provincial lass." Even at 16-year-old Lolita Rivera, she was in Manila and tried her luck in the show biz.

"My sister's father-in-law was the chief sound man in the studio. One day, she was spotted by Silos in the studio. 'People like Norma Blancaflor and I were bit roles in big movies.'"

She reminisces: "I was in the studio with Nestor de Villa and Nida. I was the wife of the king, played by Sr. I was in 'Salamangero,' with Nita Javier, and 'Everlast Montenegro and Irma Alegria.' Every time she bumped into Mario, Rogelio, Nestor and on the LYN lot, she got well-labeled (dumbfounded)."

Poor health

In 1956, she was cast as a Vietnamese-Filipino co-producer, "Kawayan," directed by Man. She had to quit, "I had my health started to fail. Ailment."

In 1958, after a much needed rest, she was rediscovered.

"The director Consuelo was my sister's neighbor. She recommended her brother, Roy Padilla."

Padilla, producer-star-director, was a fresh face for the presentation of Champion. He was a "Pakik," a trilogy of films—Jose Padilla Jr., Arsenio Delgado, Tony Santos. C. Patria Plata.

Ateng christened her. Eva, she says, "There was already a girl named Aida Cariño, also dubbed Joan Fontaine."

In "Tagiting," she was a girl. He was a director. He did use [eye drops] for crying scenes. He was a prankster. In the scene, while I was weeping, he was laughing. Her tears went for nothing."

"I kept laughing. Roy was in front of the crew. He was laughing."

Upset, she walked out. "I went to the set. I told Ateng I'd not be there." Eva had her own director. Ateng took over as director.

Real-life producer

Off the set, Roy made a living out of courting her. Before she was married.

"Ayun, Roy took his job seriously that he 'produced' me," she says, cracking up. "My child Romulus passed away at birth."

"He told me he was a bad boy. A playboy!"

Raising eight children—Royette, Roda, Rommel, Richelda—became Eva's life. Since her boys proved to be a pain, she turned to her daughter, as a teenager, Royette.

It was Rustom who said, "He would tell me, 'Mama, I want to break-dance with you at the Baguio Cathedral!'" become an actor.

He rolled at the Saint Louis. He eventually finished Ecom. He was kicked out."

In 1986, Eva and Royette produced a concert with Basil Valdez and Joey Albert in Baguio. "That was where [manager-director] Deo Fajardo spotted Rommel, but my son said he was not interested. Robin butted in and told Deo that he wanted to be a star."

Robin would be joined in the biz later by Rommel, Royette and Rustom.

Recently, Rustom hit the chismis headlines, after coming out on the reality show "Pinoy Big Brother: Celebrity Edition."

Now a preacher

Eva was hardly fazed by the ensuing controversy. She points out: "He's old enough to decide what he wants in life. And because he's my son I can never turn my back on him. All I can do is remind him not to neglect his spiritual life."

These days, Mrs. Eva divides her time between work as a preacher for Jehovah's Witnesses and her farm in Nueva Ecija.

"I preach in the squatter's area," she says. "My children say that, at my age, I should just relax, travel and visit my 22 grandkids!"

But she refuses to slow down.

"Would you believe I'm 70? My friends tell me that I should say I'm only 65. But why hide the truth?"

Defiantly, she says being a grandmother will not stop her from "wearing groovy embroidered jeans and going ballroom dancing as morning exercise."

ANGEL Aquino and Mark Gil in "Donsol," one of the most eagerly awaited entries this year.

Another finalist dropped

One more Cinemalaya grantee fails to meet deadline

By Marinel R. Cruz

ANOTHER FULL-length feature finalist in this year's Cinemalaya Independent Film Festival has been disqualified because it did not meet the deadline, INQUIRER Entertainment learned on Saturday.

Khavn dela Cruz, director of "Larombata," failed to submit the film's final copy on May 30, the deadline set by the Cinemalaya organizational committee (Orgcom), according to the festival's monitoring group chair Robbie Tan.

The Orgcom earlier decided to terminate its contract with Jon Lazam, writer and project proponent of "Mga Anino sa Apuhap," after it deemed that Lazam's group had failed to complete the requirements agreed upon.

Bogged down

Quoting Dela Cruz, Tan said "Larombata," an animated film, was not finished because the director's computer had "bogged down," making it difficult to convert graphics files into visual form, as on a video display.

Inquirer tried to contact Dela Cruz by phone on Saturday but failed. He later sent a text message informing us that he was in transit from Berlin (where he reportedly participated in a film fest) to Rome.

Tan said the Orgcom was set to meet on Wednesday to discuss the case of "Larombata."

"We have to determine what to do with the portion of the P500,000 seed grant that Cinemalaya has already given Dela Cruz," Tan explained.

JETT Pangan in "Tulad ng Dati"

Now with Cinemalaya are the final copies of the eight entries: "Batad, Sa Paang Palay" (by Benji Garcia), "Tulad ng Dati" (Michael Sandejas), "Donsol" (Adold Alix Jr.), "Ngipin ni Doring" (Dado Lumibao), "Lima" (Arah Jell Badayos), "Saan Nagtatago si Happiness?" (Florida Bautista), "Ang Huling Araw ng Linggo" (Nick Joseph Olanka) and "Rotonda" (Ron Bryant).

These finalists are competing for major awards to be handed out on July 23 in a ceremony at the CCP Main Theater in Pasay City. The festival runs from July 17 to 23. The list of nominees—to be drawn up by a five-member Cinemalaya Board of Jurors—will be released next week, said Tan.

Of the eight films, he said the most eagerly awaited—"Donsol" and "Tulad ng Dati."

"I'm flattered that my film is being considered as one of this year's best," said "Donsol" director Alix. "It was difficult [to make]. We shot entirely in Sorsogon; it has lots of underwater scenes."

"Donsol" tells the story of Teresa (Angel Aquino), a breast cancer survivor, and Daniel (Sid Lucero) a local information officer in the bucolic town. Also in the cast are Cherie Gil, Bombol Roco, Jaclyn Jose and Mark Gil.

Alix, who submitted his film's final copy on May 30, said his heart went out to Dela Cruz.

"His film is more difficult than 'Donsol.' I hope the Orgcom would reconsider its decision to disqualify his work," Alix said. "But Khavn has been an indie filmmaker for some time now. He'd know how to handle this. I'm also sure he is capable of showcasing his work in other venues."

Sandejas, who made "Tulad ng Dati," agreed: "This is a risk that both parties took. Khavn chose to join a festival with strict deadlines. Cinemalaya took a risk by backing up his project. If the deadline were to be moved for Khavn's sake, it would be unfair to the others who finished on time."

Very relieved

Because this is his first film, Sandejas said he is very excited—and, right now, "very relieved to have finished the film."

He said his work is an "alternate-reality drama." It tells of the ups and downs in the lives of members of the band The Dawn in the last 20 years. Lead vocalist Jett Pangan, drummer JB Leonor, guitarist Francis Reyes and bassists Caloy Balcells and Buddy Zabala are portraying themselves. Agot Isidro plays Pangan's wife and Ping Medina plays the late founder-guitarist Teddy Diaz.

"I owe a lot of people big time for this film. Many volunteered to help," said Sandejas. "We didn't have enough money, and there were lots of big scenes to shoot. The band members themselves asked their friends to help."

AERIALISTS perform during the "Love" preview at the Mirage hotel and casino in Las Vegas, Nevada, on June 28.

Cirque's 'Love' for the Beatles

LAS VEGAS—LUCY SWOOPS ON A trapeze across a sky twinkling with diamonds, Mr Kite presides over a psychedelic circus of stilt walkers and acrobats, and the unmistakable voices of John, Paul, George and Ringo fill the surround sound-equipped arena.

With a little help from a lot of friends, The Beatles are brought back to life in a Cirque du Soleil spectacular that marks the band's first agreement to collaborate on a stage show.

In the desert gambling city of Las Vegas, the Canadian acrobatic troupe Cirque du Soleil on Friday opened its "Love" celebration of the musical legacy of The Beatles that was almost five years in the making.

"Love" was born of a friendship between the late George Harrison and Cirque du Soleil founder Guy Laliberte. It was blessed by Paul McCartney and Ringo Starr, supported by John Lennon's widow Yoko Ono, and masterminded musically by legendary Beatles producer Sir George Martin.

McCartney, Starr, Yoko Ono, Martin and Harrison's widow Olivia attended Friday night's premiere along with Lennon's sons Julian and Sean, his first wife Cynthia and Harrison's children Blair and Dhani.

Played in a custom-built, 2,000-seat theater at the Mirage hotel, "Love" takes its audience on a part-chronological, part-fantasy journey through the life and times of the four young men from Liverpool who inspired a worldwide Beatlemania that continues 40 years after their first hit record.

High-wire acrobats, break dancers, trampoline artists and skaters bring life to characters like Sgt. Pepper, Lady Madonna and the sea world of Octopus's Garden in a visual feast of color, light and adventure.

But for avid Beatles fans, the real star of the show is the music—some 130 songs remixed, mashed up and born again with a clarity never heard before.

Sir George Martin, who worked on every Beatles album except "Let It Be," and his son Giles Martin spent two years working from the original master tapes of The Beatles sessions to produce a 90-minute soundtrack that is played through six speakers in the back of each seat as well as a panoramic sound system. Reuters

'We have been united to sing harmony'

The Manhattan Transfer: Doo-wop!

By Tina Arceo-Dumlao

YOU NEVER REALLY KNOW what harmony is all about until you hear The Manhattan Transfer.

Their Grammy-winning versions of "Boy From New York City" and "Until I Met You," a cappella rendition of "A Nightingale Sang in Berkeley Square" and foot-stomping take of the Weather Report's "Birdland"—said to be their unofficial anthem—should be proof enough.

The voices of Janis Siegel, Tim Hauser, Alan Paul and Cheryl Bentyne hold their own individually but come together seamlessly like a string quartet, the combination worth more than the sum of the parts.

And although it has been more than 25 years since they got together, The Manhattan Transfer has remained the standard by which other vocal groups are measured.

In an e-mail interview with Inquirer Entertainment, Bentyne said they sustain that elusive harmony by constantly listening to each other.

Some may think it is instinctive on their part since they have been together for so long, but Bentyne said the contrary is true. They still have to practice and keep on improving.

"For recording a new CD, we rehearse for about four to six weeks," she said.

It also helps that the four members have been together since 1979, start of the second phase of The Manhattan Transfer, which was founded by Hauser in the late 1960s.

They have developed into more than just band mates to become lifelong friends.

"Our children grew up together as well and are also friends. But we are more family than friends," Bentyne said.

The Manhattan Transfer won Grammy Awards in both pop and jazz in 1981 for "Boy From New York City" and "Until I Met You." They got another Grammy for Best Jazz Vocal Performance, Duo or Group, the following year for "Route 66," and again the next year for "Why Not."

They have been singing these songs for years in front of audiences or in the confines of a recording studio. But Bentyne said "Birdland" remains a tough assignment.

"Birdland" is still very challenging. It's very demanding on our voices and we know the audience expects it to be great," she said. "The easiest is any doo-wop!"

Doo-wop refers to the vocal-based rhythm and blues style popularized in the 1950s and 1960s in the United States, which many use to describe The Manhattan Transfer's sound.

Examples would be "Operator," a remake of a 1950s gospel tune and "Tuxedo Junction," which was based on a Glenn Miller arrangement.

Filipino music lovers will get to hear these tunes and more when The Manhattan Transfer arrives for two concerts—on July 5 at Waterfront Hotel in Cebu and July 7 at the Araneta Coliseum in Quezon City as part of their Asian tour.

It can be quite rigorous to be on the road and stay in top form but, Bentyne said, they keep going because of the music.

The group is even discussing the possibility of soon coming up with new material to complement their classics.

"The group keeps going strong," Bentyne said, "because of the music... and the realization that we have been united for a greater purpose... to sing harmony."

INQUIRER EXCLUSIVE

TOM Petty (second from right) and the Heartbreakers, with members of Pearl Jam in a concert on June 27.

Tom Petty opens closet

CLEVELAND—IT'S NOT OFTEN A rock star opens up his bedroom closet to the world. Tom Petty did and the results are on display at the Rock and Roll Hall of Fame and Museum, which is showcasing Petty and the Heartbreakers in an exhibit that opened Friday.

When representatives from the Rock Hall visited Petty's Spanish-style ranch in Malibu, California, in April looking for artifacts, he invited them into his bedroom, then into his rather sizable closet.

Petty pulled out a flowered shirt he wore in the video for his biggest chart hit, "Free Fallin'," and the gray jacket he wore as a member of the esteemed Traveling Wilburys. He also produced a nylon bag of notebooks filled with handwritten lyrics. "We left his house pinching ourselves," said curator Howard Kramer.

The exhibit includes a montage of the band's videos, including the psychedelic, "Alice in Wonderland"-inspired "Don't Come Around Here No More." Petty's oversized hat from his "The Mad Hatter" role is a permanent part of the museum's collection. AP

Regal, Aga, Claudine big Star Awards winners

By Nini Valera

THE MULTI-GENERATIONAL LOVE story "Blue Moon," produced by Regal Entertainment as an entry to last year's Metro Manila Film Festival, was declared Movie of the Year on Friday at the 22nd Star Awards for Movies held at the Grand Ballroom of the Philippine Plaza Hotel.

This is the second Best Picture award (it was the top MMFF 2005 winner) for the movie, which also gave director Joel Lamangan the Star Award for Director of the Year.

Regal matriarch Lily Monteverde dedicated the Movie of the Year trophy to all producers.

Mother's dream

"Many people do not understand why I still make movies," she said in her short acceptance speech. "What they don't know is that for me to produce movies, I have to make a lot of sacrifice. [But] it is my dream to go on producing movies."

In fact, she has been doing so since 1961. And this year, Regal has lined up at least a dozen movies for production.

Lamangan called on all movie workers to unite, to keep the industry alive. It was the fourth award for Lamangan.

This year's Star Awards introduced two new categories—Digital Movie of the Year and Digital Movie Director of the Year, apparently recognizing the emergence of digital films as a major force.

ufo Pictures' "Ang Pagdadalaga ni Maximo Oliveros" was named Digital Movie of the Year, and its director, Aureus Solito,

MATT Ranillo III, Katya Santos, Angelu de Leon and Ricky Davao

Digital Movie Director of the Year

Solito described his win as a dream that has finally come true—even if "Maxi" had already won recognition from audiences and film festivals around the world.

Aga Muhlach, who was named Actor of the Year for his role in the movie "Dubai," admitted that awards ceremonies still made him nervous. He poked fun at himself, saying, "I'm so baduy (tacky)." INQUIRER Entertainment later found out that his hands were as cold as ice minutes after he went down the stage.

He commended fellow nominee Ricky Davao ("Mga Pusang Gala") and thanked co-stars Claudine Barretto and John Lloyd Cruz, who won Supporting Actor of the Year, for "making things easy for me."

Aga also won as Male Face of the Night; and Ana Rocas, Female Face of the Night.

Like Aga, Claudine Barretto was jittery when she received her Actress of the Year Award for "Nasaan Ka Man." She began thanking people involved in the movie

"Dubai" after a clip of the film was erroneously shown on screen.

"I was confused by that," she later told INQUIRER. "I knew I was nominated for 'Nasaan,' but what was shown was a clip from 'Dubai.' But I also thanked the people I worked with in 'Nasaan.'"

This is the fourth Best Actress award for Claudine; she received the first a few years ago for "Luna."

Glad she came

Gloria Diaz was named Supporting Actress of the Year for "Nasaan Ka Man." The former Miss Universe told INQUIRER that she was the happiest person that night "because I wasn't expecting to win."

She said, "My aim now is to win an award in a comedy role. That would be the ultimate for me. I almost did not come tonight because I have a fever. I'm glad I came."

Receiving the Uligang Artista Award for Armida Siguan-Reyna was her daughter-in-law Bibeth Orteza.

"She is also a model mother-in-law," Bibeth said in Filipino.

It was a tie for Annalyn Bansi-il ("Ang Daan Patungong Kalimugtong") and Elijah Castillo ("Pepe Artist") for Child Performer of the Year.

New Actress of the Year was Ryza Cenon for "Love Struck" and New Actor of the Year was Nathan Lopez for "Maximo Oliveros."

Other winners: Marya Ignacio, Editor, for "Nasaan Ka Man"; Allan Tijamo, Original Screenplay, "Blue Moon"; Charlie Peralta, Cinematographer, "Nasaan Ka Man"; Joey Luna, Production Designer, "Blue Moon"; Vince de Jesus, Musical Scorer, "Let The Love Begin"; and Addiss Tabong, Sound Engineer, "Nasaan Ka Man."

Singer-composer Ogie Alcasid received the Original Theme Song of the Year award for "Ikaw Lamang," from "Dubai," which was interpreted by Gary Valenciano.

After five years of being nominated for Darling of the Press, Ara Mina finally won. Stars of the Night were Hero Angeles and Ruffa Gutierrez.

"I think it's because of what they wore," said actress Irma Adlawan.

Ruffa, who hosted the show with Boy Abunda, had two costume changes. But stealing the scene from her was a unidentified starlet, who turned up wearing only body paint.

Songs, laughs

Spicing up the awards rites were musical numbers from some of the brightest stars in the record industry. Lovi Poe, John Lapus and Nikki Gil did a string of songs popularized by some of today's hottest bands. Erik Santos and Rachelle Ann Go sang the songs nominated for Original Theme Song of the Year.

Sarah Geronimo sang a medley of "Bituin Walang Ningning" and "Pangarap na Bituin."

Not to be outdone by the younger singers, Rico J. Puno brought the house down with his rendition of the Eraserheads hit "Huling El Bimbo." In his trademark raspy vocals, Rico J. delivered a quirky performance accompanied by "back-up dancers" Maui Taylor, Cherrie Lou, Andrea del Rosario and Jenny Miller.

It's Superman! No, it's KC Montero!

GUESS WHO WORE A SUPERMAN SUIT TO the celebrity screening of "Superman Returns" at Mall of Asia's Imax Theater on Wednesday? Okay, don't guess, just look—it's a veejay... it's Geneva's boyfriend... it's KC Montero!

Better copy for celebs?

Now, look again. The stars who showed up at the special screening are all smiling. Does this mean they got a better print of the movie than was screened for the press the day before?

Must be love

Superstar Judy Ann Santos took time out from a killer schedule to be with her boyfriend, TV host Ryan Agoncillo, on a three-day trip to Davao last week.

The lovebirds ate lunch and supper with the staff of "Philippine Idol," a show which Ryan hosts. During a break they took a ferry boat to Pearl Farm on Samal Island.

MPC drops tollway bid, eyes power sector

Seen joining auction for Transco concession

By Elizabeth L. Sanchez and Abigail L. Ho

METRO PACIFIC CORP. HAS DISCONTINUED TALKS with the Lopezes to acquire Benpres Holdings Corp.'s 49-percent interest in Manila North Tollways Corp., operator of the 80-kilometer North Luzon toll road, MPC chair Manuel V. Pangilinan told the INQUIRER business staff on Friday.

Pangilinan also said that as a result of unsuccessful negotiations with the Lopez group, MPC has dropped similar negotiations with French firm Egis and Australian company Leighton Asia Ltd., minority shareholders of MNTC.

"(Negotiations are) dead," Pangilinan said when asked how the talks with the Lopezes were progressing.

An agreement with the Lopez group might have led to a deal with MNTC's foreign shareholders—Egis and Leighton Asia—which were also considering selling a combined 23 percent to MPC.

Aside from flagship firm Benpres holding 49 percent, the Lopez group's First Philippine Holdings Corp. owns 51 percent of First Philippine Infrastructure Development Corp., which in turn owns 67 percent of MNTC.

Pangilinan earlier expressed dismay after negotiations with the Lopezes dragged on for more than a year.

"We would be patient but we can't wait forever. We have the option to look at other opportunities because these discussions have been going on for a year. It would be more prudent for (MPC) to look at other opportunities," Pangilinan said.

Pangilinan earlier said that MPC wanted to increase its investment in the Skyway, Metro Manila's overhead highway to the south, but an Indonesian group that controlled the Skyway could not decide if it wanted to retain control or sell. Citra Metro Manila Tollways Corp., a joint venture of

IBP's double standard

HE LEADS MENDIOLA PROTESTS AGAINST the alleged corrupt and repressive GMA regime, but right inside his own backyard, Jose Anselmo Cadiz, the president of the Integrated Bar of the Philippines, goes weak when confronting legal infractions involving fellow lawyers.

First, Cadiz and the IBP questioned the Supreme Court suspension of a fellow Sigma Rhoan who was found to have appeared in an intracorporate suit against his very own client.

Now, Cadiz and his IBP board have again exonerated another lawyer and an Erap appointee whom the Supreme Court has just tagged as having compromised a Baguio judge.

The Supreme Court last week fined and censured Judge Antonio Reyes for having his three-month dining spree at the Baguio Country Club paid for by club president Federico Agcaoili, while the judge was hearing a BCC case in his sala.

While the high tribunal censured Reyes, the IBP tasked by the SC to investigate the disbarment case using the same testimony and documents, nevertheless let go Agcaoili for alleged lack of evidence.

In other words, while the judge took the fall from the Supreme Court en banc, the lawyer—a former president of the Philippine Bar Association at that—who had inveigled his honor into such an embarrassment goes scot-free.

BIR's winning record

CONTRARY to popular impression, the Bureau of Internal Revenue does win tax collection cases.

Out of the 10 BIR-related cases that the Supreme Court decided from January to June, the BIR won six, all except one involving tax payment disputes.

The most contentious of the six victories involved Benguet Corp. during the presidency of Delfin Lazaro, whose P6.1-million check payments for the withholding taxes of top Benguet officials were found to have been funneled instead to pay for the documentary stamp taxes of other parties.

Despite blaming its agent, LC Diaz and Co., for the checks having been waylaid, Benguet was still found liable for the unpaid taxes, which had ballooned to more than P12 million because of interests and penalties. Lazaro later went on to become energy secretary of Fidel V. Ramos.

Hazardous headlines

THE ADVERTISING Board has rejected the application of Maxim, the men's magazine, to install a billboard by the Rockwell flyover because the model's mammaries are said to be "way too big."

Despite the bosom already having been graphically downsized, the AdBoard, fearing the frontal attractions could cause motoring accidents, still rejected the appeal.

According to the grapevine, the offending billboard is but a blow-up of an upcoming cover page of Maxim; the wonderfully endowed model goes by the name of Angelica Panganiban, a current Bench endorser.

Money-go-round

• FORMER Deputy Executive Secretary Richard Ferrer, who is now with the PLDT Group, is set to assume the presidency of the Makati Medical Center to backstop his chair, Manuel V. Pangilinan.

• THE ASIAN Wall Street Journal, no admirer of Gloria Macapagal-Arroyo, has sniffed at the impeachment "circus" the opposition is again mounting.

"If Manila's politicians could stop squabbling long enough, they'd realize that there are bigger things to worry about," the business paper said in a June 29 editorial.

Heard through the grapevine

THE ROMUALDEZES are expanding their bread-and-butter People's Journal tabloid by launching a higher-end variant by the last quarter.

Drillers spending $100M to revive Galoc oilfield dev't

Offshore Palawan project seen yielding first oil in November 2007

THE SURGE IN CRUDE OIL PRICES HAS prompted local and foreign drillers to revive oil exploration activities at the Galoc oilfield in offshore Palawan.

This was reported by Oriental Petroleum and Minerals Corp. chair James L. Go and president Robert Coyiuto Jr. during OPMC's stockholders' meeting last week.

The Galoc oilfield is located at a water depth of 1,000 feet and situated in Block C of Service Contract-14 in northwest Palawan.

The officials said that the Department of Energy has already approved Phase 1 of the plan of development for Galoc. This includes the drilling of two horizontal wells, the installation of production facilities, and the lease of a floating production storage offloading tanker or FPSO with a capacity of 450,000 barrels.

The first phase of development is estimated to cost $100 million and the recoverable oil reserves are estimated to be in the range of 10 to 20 million barrels.

According to the development plan, drilling of the two Galoc production wells is scheduled to start in June 2007 and will be completed by September. Installation of facilities and hook up to the FPSO will be in October and start of production or first oil is anticipated in early November 2007. Initial production or flow rate is programmed at 21,000 barrels of oil a day.

The Galoc crude is expected to fetch a conservative price of $55 a barrel or better during production. Should results of Phase 1 prove to be encouraging, another one or two production wells will be drilled under Phase 2 of Galoc development.

The Galoc development project is being carried out by a consortium led by Galoc Production Co. (GPC) with Nido Petroleum Philippines Pte. Ltd. (Australia) as paying parties and a group of Philippine-owned companies as carried or non-paying partners. Oriental Petroleum has the biggest carried interest of 7.6 percent, which is also its share of the distributable oil revenues.

Go and Coyiuto Jr. indicated that with the anticipated income from Galoc, Oriental Petroleum would hopefully be in a position to pay its way in future petroleum projects without having to farm out or reduce the company's interest. The company may also venture in other energy projects if enough revenue is generated from Galoc.

The presently producing Nido and Matinloc oilfields generated for Oriental Petroleum a gross profit of P55 million from its share of oil revenues from these two oilfields. Third parties have pending interest to explore for oil in the other blocks of SC-14 and SC-6B in northwest Palawan such as West Linapacan and Cadiao. The proposals are now being evaluated.

Just recently, agreement has been reached with an Australian-based oil company to farm into SC-41 South Sulu Sea. Despite disappointing results of recent drillings in the area, the South Sulu Sea contract area continues to be prospective, being situated in the same geologic setting as the prolific oil and gas fields of Brunei, Sarawak and East Kalimantan. The deepwater portion will be the object this time of this new round of exploration. Oriental Petroleum presently has an interest of 27 percent in SC-41.

Atlas Mining subsidiary eyes foreign share listing

By Elizabeth L. Sanchez

CARMEN COPPER CORP., A SUBSIDIARY OF mining giant Atlas Consolidated Mining and Development Corp., is keen on a possible public listing next year on either the Toronto Stock Exchange in Canada or the London Stock Exchange, Atlas chair Alfredo Ramos said.

Ramos stressed that a decision on the planned listing has yet to be finalized. Carmen Copper carries Atlas' copper mining-related assets in Toledo, Cebu.

Ramos explained that the company has not qualified with the Philippine Stock Exchange's profitability requirements as of this time since Carmen Copper has not started mining operations.

Proceeds of a proposed initial public offering will partly finance the reopening of the Toledo mines in Cebu that Atlas Mining closed in 1994 after it was beset by a mudslide, low world copper prices and huge debts.

Atlas Mining is bent on reopening its copper mines in Toledo City and in developing its other copper assets through its newly formed unit, Carmen Copper.

Formerly controlled by the Soriano group, which also ran blue chip firms like beverage and food conglomerate San Miguel Corp. and integrated paper manufacturer Paper Industries Corporation of the Philippines, Atlas Mining fell under the control of creditors in 1994.

Alakor Corp., headed by businessman Alfredo Ramos, has acquired majority control of the Toledo mines, with Atlas Mining unloading a big chunk of its obligations in a debt-for-equity swap with Alakor and Minor Mining and Exploration Corp.

Philippine mining has been gaining foreign investor interest after the Supreme Court upheld a law that allows foreign ownership of mining projects.

MPC drops tollway bid, eyes power sector

Indonesian firm PT. Citra Lamtoro Gung Persada and PNCC, controls the Skyway. MPC has a 10-percent stake in the company and has offered to take control from the Indonesians.

The 9.3-km Skyway runs from the Magallanes subdivision in Makati City to Bicutan, and can be extended by another six to seven kilometers to Alabang. Pangilinan had said that before MPC could offer to extend the Skyway, South Luzon Expressway has to be developed first all the way to Calamba town, outside Metro Manila.

During the roundtable with the INQUIRER Business section, Pangilinan also said that MPC remained keen on bidding for the 25-year National Transmission Corp. (Transco) concession, although it was a bit wary of some things that the winning concessionaire would have to face, including non-ownership of Transco's assets and the five-year rate reset period.

"We're looking at it now, yes. But we don't know yet (whether or not we'll go ahead and join the auction). It's one of those things that we dread, we fear because you are firmly embedded with government. You don't own the assets," he said.

"You pay 25 percent (of the bid price), and you owe them the 75 percent, and yet you own no asset. So you

Gov't picks financial adviser for sale of Philpost stake

THE GOVERNMENT HAS TAPPED PRICEWATERHOUSECOOPERS as financial adviser for the privatization of Philippine Postal Corp.

The Privatization Management Office said the financial adviser would determine the best way to privatize the government's 55-percent share in Philpost.

The government fully owns Philpost, but the Postal Service Act of 1992 mandates the sale of 55 percent of its 100-percent interest. The government was not able to privatize the postal service immediately because of its poor financial position.

Officials involved in the government's privatization program, however, said Philpost had already posted a financial turnaround and that it was now attractive to investors.

After suffering from losses in previous years, Philpost registered a net income of P99 million in 2004.

Authorities were earlier considering the sale of the 55-percent stake either an initial public offering or a direct sale. They initially preferred a direct sale, although the final mode of privatization would be determined based on a study to be conducted by the financial adviser.

The government intends to sell Philpost this year.

The plan to sell Philpost is in line with the government's policy of getting out of businesses that could be best handled by the private sector.

If sold to a private investor, Philpost is expected to be able to improve its technological capability

Gov't moves to ease burden of exporters

Finance, DTI eye removal of fees

By Michelle V. Remo

FINANCE SECRETARY MARGARITO TEVES said the Department of Finance was amenable to proposals seeking the removal of various fees imposed on exporters to help develop the export industry.

Teves said a technical working group—composed of the DOF, the Department of Trade and Industry and the National Tax Research Center (NTRC)—would meet and decide soon on the proposed withdrawal of fees. Initial discussions seemed to favor the approval of the proposal, he said.

"We can get rid of those fees. The impact on government revenue would not be significant, but we think it could be a big help to exporters," Teves told reporters at the sidelines of the 84th anniversary celebration of Isla Lipana & Co. held in Makati City last week.

Estimates showed that the removal of the export fees would result in some P30 million in foregone government revenue.

While importers are charged duties on shipments brought into the country, exporters are required to pay several fees, including those charged for inspection and clearance, before they can ship out their products.

Donald Dee of the Philippine Chamber of Commerce and Industry said the support of the DOF on the proposed lifting of export fees was a welcome development. Besides lowering the cost of doing business for exporters, Dee said the proposal would help simplify the export procedures.

The lifting of export fees would primarily benefit small players in the export industry, as many big exporters, particularly those located in economic zones, are already exempted from such fees.

Teves said measures that could help businesses but would not significantly hurt government revenues, were among the things that the DOF would not hesitate to support.

Yehey prepares for IPO in 2007

PHILIPPINE SEARCH ENGINE YEHEY.COM IS preparing for a possible initial public offering next year through aggressive efforts to return to profit, officials said.

Yehey president Donald Patrick Lim said Yehey's sales had increased by 20 percent in the first five months this year, boosted by on-line advertisements from large clients in Singapore. He said he was expecting Yehey to be "back in the black" by next year.

Ivantage Corp., Yehey's parent firm, said in a statement that it was positioning Yehey as the primary Filipino portal for online advertisements and e-commerce payment deals.

Yehey recently received P27.9 million in cash from Ivantage for the portal's expansion plans.

Yehey plans to transform itself into a full-scale online marketing solutions provider from being an online advertising medium.

Yehey was founded in 1996 by college friends as a search engine. The company's bread and butter is online advertising. Elizabeth L. Sanchez

La Salle GSB program for artists bags award

THE DE LA SALLE PROFESSIONAL SCHOOLS Graduate School of Business was recently named one of the top winners in the Panibagong Paraan Project Grant competition sponsored by the World Bank and other funding agencies. Panibagong Paraan is the country's largest and most unique bazaar of innovative ideas for promoting development and equity.

One of more than 900 entries, DLSPS GSB's entry, Culture Cooperative for Rural Artists, was chosen as one of the six recipients of the project grant given by the World Bank. The entry is a partnership between DLSPS GSB and the Artists Guild of Santa Maria (Agos), an organization of 25 visual artists based in Santa Maria, Bulacan. Agos serves as a pilot group for culture cooperativism in the country.

The concept of culture cooperativism recognizes the value of helping talented artists help one another to form a sustainable way to economic empowerment.

Culture Cooperative for Rural Artists addresses Agos' limited access to financial resources and markets.

Model companies

VICTORIA COURT bagged three major awards in the Department of Trade and Industry's Pro-Active Programs Achievement Award-Search for Model Companies 2006.

The awards proved that the company had established itself as a premiere drive-in hotel in the country.

The Search for Model Companies is an annual quest for outstanding companies that have distinguished themselves in the field of employer-employee relations, quality of service and production, and customer relations. Victoria Court won the Labor Management Relations award, Family Welfare/Community Relations award, and the Quality and Productivity award. Other winners are Zuellig Pharmaceutical, Universal Robina Corp. and GMA 7.

SSS proposes changes in computing members' contributions

By Michelle V. Remo

THE SOCIAL SECURITY SYSTEM (SSS) plans to raise the maximum salary base for computing the required contributions from members and their employers to the pension fund.

SSS President and Chief Executive Officer Corazon dela Paz said the proposal was meant to ensure stability of the fund and to improve future benefits of members.

There are several salary bases used in computing the required contributions to the fund. The required amount of contribution stands at 9.4 percent of the salary base applicable to a member.

Currently, the maximum salary base is P15,000. This means employees who earn P15,000 a month, or any amount beyond that, should have a monthly contribution to the SSS equivalent to 9.4 percent of P15,000.

Of the 9.4-percent required contribution, two-thirds is shouldered by the employer while the remaining one-third is shouldered by the employee covered by the social security.

Raising the maximum salary base would mean an increase in the required contributions either by the employers alone, or both the employers and the employees. But initially, the SSS is looking at asking employers to fully shoulder the proposed increase.

"We have to make people appreciate the need to increase contributions because this will have an impact on future benefits," De La Paz told reporters at the sidelines of the 84th anniversary celebration of auditing firm Isla Lipana & Co. held in Makati City last week.

De La Paz said increasing the maximum salary base was a friendlier alternative proposal to the original suggestion of increasing the required percentage contribution of 9.4 percent.

She said the first proposal was deemed burdensome both by employers and employees.

The SSS was earlier looking at raising the required percentage contribution to 16 percent, and then eventually to 22 percent, to comply with the suggestions of an actuarial study.

The study said contributions should be raised to 22 percent to make the SSS pension fund viable.

But De La Paz said that President Macapagal-Arroyo still has not decided whether to approve the proposal, which is perceived to be highly unpopular.

The SSS chief said, however, that based on initial talks between the SSS and the Philippine Chamber of Commerce and Industry (PCCI), the business group did not oppose the proposed hike in the maximum salary base.

She said that the PCCI found the proposal more acceptable than the original, although she stressed that the business group has yet to state its final position on the matter.

The SSS earlier announced that, under a status-quo scenario, the life of its fund would last until 2031.

Europe, Japan threaten emerging markets

Expected increase of key rates seen to be a thorn in RP's side

By Doris C. Dumlaog

CONCERNS OVER FURTHER money tightening in the United States may have piped down for now, but other events are beginning to unfold in Europe and Japan, which are expected to draw offshore investors' attention away from emerging markets like the Philippines.

"The Fed is unsure over what it will do next," according to the London-based global economics unit of American Express Bank, which added that the markets last week had calmed down after moving too far ahead "by pricing an August rate hike as another virtual certainty."

"But events elsewhere—with the European Central Bank still very hawkish and Japan set to raise rates—could impact markets and risk aversion, regardless of what the Fed may or may not do," Amex said in a commentary after the Fed meeting on Friday.

Amex said the probability of the US Federal Reserve's pricing of another overnight rate hike on Aug. 8 had now dropped back to 60:40 from an 85:15 call earlier last week.

Amex said the Bank of Japan would likely raise rates by a quarter-percentage point during its meeting on July 14, and then hike rates at a pace of a quarter-point per quarter, in line with current market expectations.

"Rate hikes may spook equity market investors in Japan for a while," Amex said. "But it will take a long time—one to two years—to get to even the bottom of a 2-4 percent 'neutral' range. Japan's high savings also mean that the overall economic impact of rates moving up should be stimulatory and positive, not negative."

The banking giant said it could not rule out an ECB rate hike next week, but it would most likely stay on hold.

"Euro-zone data remains strong and ECB rhetoric has stayed hawkish," it said. "Some ECB members may want to get to a 'neutral' 3-4 percent range [from the current 2.75 percent now] very quickly ... an August hike looks most probable."

The statement issued by the Federal Open Market Committee on Friday produced a powerful reaction boosting stocks and bonds, and hammering the US dollar.

Amex said there were three important notes to what the Fed had said:

- The US central bank has more confidence now that the US economy is slowing down, a development it believes may help contain inflation;

- Their comments on the inflation outlook were still hawkish or biased towards tightening, but the Fed didn't highlight anything new, and toned down the inflation concerns expressed in earlier statements; and,

- The Fed outlook has become more explicitly tied to what happens to the growth data, as well as inflation data.

"We expect that the economy will slow enough for the Fed to pause from its August meeting," Amex reported. "The Fed would hike again if the slowdown comes through more gradually than they anticipate, or if core monthly consumer price inflation and core personal consumption expenditure—their preferred inflation measure—moves up significantly."

"Overall, we expect a mild US slowdown ... a Fed pause over the summer, if it happens, won't necessarily mean the end of rate hikes."

Chicken exporters seen to cash in on Japan trade

CASHING IN ON JAPAN'S PEAK demand for the period, Philippine poultry exports have resumed shipments to that country with the delivery of 9 metric tons, an industry official said.

Cleared of the deadly avian flu, Philippine poultry exporters led by agribusiness firm San Miguel Foods Inc. have shipped to Japan a 20-cubic foot container van filled with frozen deboned chicken fillet and other choice cuts, according to Philippine Poultry Exporters Board chair Ruben Pascual.

"For the next three months, there will be a deluge in demand in Japan and we hope to take advantage of this opportunity," Pascual told the INQUIRER.

He said other accredited member-companies from the Philippine Association of Broiler Integrators (Pabi), like RFM Swift Foods Corp., Tyson Agro Ventures

Inc., Universal Robina Corp. and Vitarich Corp., are bullish on their export prospects in Japan, which requires 100,000 metric tons of chicken a year.

After learning that Philippine poultry is free of the H5N1—the lethal avian flu strain—Japan's Ministry of Agriculture, Fishery and Forestry gave the go-signal for Philippine companies to export chicken products.

Local companies are now upgrading their facilities to cope with the anticipated huge demand in the coming years, Pascual said.

Philippine poultry exporters are now seeking similar accreditations from Hong Kong and South Korean authorities.

Pascual also said that local companies may soon export to Middle Eastern countries as companies are working on their Halal accreditation. Christine A. Gaylican

Authorities may decide to transfer UITF regulation from BSP to SEC

THE FUROR ON UNIT INVESTMENT trust funds (UITFs) may have died down, but one question keeps popping up: Should the Bangko Sentral ng Pilipinas continue regulating the pooled funds, or should this responsibility be turned over to the Securities and Exchange Commission?

BSP Deputy Governor for bank supervision and examination Nestor Espenilla Jr. said the possible transfer of UITF regulation to the SEC was among the items being discussed under the proposed Revised Investment Companies Act (RICA).

"We need to study that [issue] carefully," Espenilla said. "UITF is a trust, and UITF is placed under the responsibility of the banking industry. We may be open to [the transfer], but it may not be legally possible. Even if it's legally possible, we'll have to study whether it's a wise policy."

According to Mike Ferrer, ING Investment Management regional manager for South Asia, "in other markets, the lines between banking and asset management are more defined."

"In some cases, banks own asset management companies whereas here, it's much more closely linked," Ferrer added.

Asked whether such a transfer was an option, SEC chair Fe Barin replied that "UITFs are covered by a BSP circular."

"[But the possible regulation by the SEC] is something to look at," Barin added, noting that while UITFs and mutual funds may look the same, they were technically different.

Espenilla said that there are no UITFs in the US. In the United States, he said, what they have are mostly mutual funds.

Espenilla said that the regulatory framework there could not be replicated here.

UITFs are pooled trust funds in acceptable currencies operated by a trust entity and made available by participation.

The BSP ordered the phaseout of the common trust funds in favor of the UITFs and exempted these from reserve requirements as they are independent from the bank proper.

When the circular on UITF was being drafted, industry sources said the SEC chair at that time began to question why it was the BSP that should regulate the products.

Ferrer, who is based in Hong Kong, noted that across the globe, the fund management industry is growing faster than bank deposits, with the worldwide average against deposits now hitting 75 percent.

"In the US, since 1994, mutual funds and unit trusts have outgrown the banking system's deposits (with the ratio) now at 150 percent," Ferrer said.

The ING executive said the fund management industry in the US, the oldest in the world, could provide a bit of a roadmap of what could happen.

While the aftermath of the May 2006 UITF meltdown seemed bleak, Ferrer said that could prove to be a "net positive" in the sense that it increased awareness on trust fund products, particularly the risks and returns on these products.

Over the long term, Ferrer said, a more liberal investment policy could help UITFs, particularly if the restrictions on the portion allowed to be invested abroad were liberalized, as this would diversify risks and open up opportunity for greater returns.

At the same time, he said the UITF industry would benefit if banks were allowed to engage in securities borrowing and lending or short-selling, allowing them to sell securities which they do not yet have.

Ferrer said the presence of such hedging tools would temper volatility in the local financial markets as it would reduce actual sell-down.

Philippine assets held in CTFs and UITFs combined are estimated at only P350 billion or 12 percent of total bank deposits, significantly lower than Singapore's 17 percent, Malaysia's 26 percent, Hong Kong's 88 percent and even Thailand's 13 percent.

"The figures suggest strong growth potentials as investment funds will escalate in importance ... in the years to come," Ferrer said.

How increase in First World interest rates affects RP

WHEN UNCLE SAM SNEEZES, Juan dela Cruz catches a cold. This best explains why the peso—which surged to a three-and-a-half-year peak of 50.88:$1 in early March—recently lost its gains against the US dollar.

The Philippines, like other Asian emerging markets badly hit by the currency fallout in 1997, cannot help but feel the pinch of rising interest rates in the First World.

Weighed down over the last two months by concerns on whether the US Federal Reserve would continue its two-year monetary tightening campaign, the peso slid back to where it was at end-2005.

The higher bond yield in the US, as influenced by the series of increases in the US Fed's overnight rates from 1 to 5.25 percent, has lured more global investors back to US dollar assets, drawing appetite away from emerging markets like the Philippines.

For its part, the Bangko Sentral ng Pilipinas' overnight borrowing rate has been kept steady at 7.5 percent since October last year, as a favorable outlook on domestic inflation reduces the need to follow the US Fed's cue.

"The benign inflation outlook has largely allowed the BSP to keep the policy rates, but we do recognize upside risks which include high oil prices and rising global interest rates," said BSP Deputy Governor Diwa Guinigundo. "At the instance that high oil prices start triggering second round effects and [change] inflation expectations, the market can expect decisive action from the BSP."

Will Oswald, JP Morgan head for emerging markets quantitative strategy, said compared to emerging market regions in eastern Europe and Latin America, Asia was the most closely tied to the behavior of US interest rates.

"It's partly because of trade," the London-based Oswald told the INQUIRER. "Asia has a larger amount of trade with the US."

"If you look at Asia, interest rates are much lower than the US, so the sensitivity (of tightening) is felt much higher in Asia."

But economic managers are hoping that the apparent shift in market appetite away from emerging markets—which had prompted Philippine issuers like state-owned Development Bank of the Philippines and Land Bank of the Philippines to abort offshore bond offerings—would be temporary and that Philippine assets would become attractive in the long run.

"It may be more attractive now for capital to move to the US, but I'm hoping the market will normalize," Finance Secretary Margarito Teves said. "If we continue to improve on our market fundamentals, the Philippines would be among the countries [investors would strongly] consider if they decide to move back their capital to emerging markets."

Study: Retirees get better deals here than in other parts of Asia

By Christine A. Gaylican

PHILIPPINE COMPANIES HAVE THE highest regard for employees who are about to retire than in other firms elsewhere in Asia, according to a recent study conducted by Watson-Wyatt Worldwide.

Watson Wyatt, a global human capital and financial management consulting services firm, recently conducted a survey involving 2,332 companies in 11 countries, and learned that Filipino companies have provided well for the pension of employees.

Philippine firms voluntarily provided for the retirement benefits of its employees, according to Bob Charles, Watson Wyatt Asia-Pacific regional head for retirement benefits practice.

"Out of the 227 companies from top 2,000 corporations surveyed in the Philippines, about 60 percent, or 136 companies, provided supplementary retirement benefits to employees, compared to the 10 to 20 percent of companies based in other Asian countries including China, Indonesia, Thailand and Malaysia," Charles said in an interview.

He pointed out that those surveyed belong to large local companies with a mix of local and foreign ownership and with at least 100 full time employees.

"These companies saw that part of their catch in retaining high performing employees is to have a very attractive retirement and health benefits package for the employees and their families," Charles said.

According to the survey, Filipino workers aged 50 and above comprise roughly 13 percent of the total population. The number of workers in this age range is expected to grow to 21 percent by 2030, and to 30 percent by 2050. In contrast, the same age group in Japan already comprises 41 percent of its present population, and is seen to expand to 51 percent by 2030.

Charles explained that this presents better opportunities for skilled Filipino workers, which are growing by an annual average of 20 percent.

Inequalities still exist, United Nations says

GENEVA—A RECENT UNITED Nations report said that globalization has failed to close glaring inequalities between rich and poor nations and called for developing countries to be given more space to build up their national economies.

The UN's "2006 World Economic and Social Survey" said that inequalities at the global level had grown sharply in recent decades, once fast growing China and India—which between them account for one-third of the world's population—were left out of the equation.

The report said those developments "are at odds with the conventional economic wisdom regarding how income differentials among countries change over time in a more integrated world economy".

Only a small number of nations have been able to make up the chasm that separates them from wealthy economies despite a belief in the 1980s and 1990s that "giving more space to the global market would lead to a closing of the income gap", it added.

"This did not happen... despite the fact that countries across the globe had opened up their trade and financial systems to the global market," the report by the UN's department of economic and social affairs underlined.

It argued that poorer countries need to be given more opportunity to diversify their commodity-based economies to make them less vulnerable to fluctuations in world prices and shocks in international financial markets.

They should be able to follow the example set by dynamic Asian economies by shifting towards high-tech industrial production and services, the report argued.

"Success in exports is basically associated with what you export, not how much you export," UN Undersecretary General Jose Antonio Ocampo told journalists.

"To stave off collapses such as those felt in the developing world in 1996-1998 and 2000-2002, countries should adopt policies adopted to their national situations, breaking free of lockstep approaches to policy-making," he said.

Developing countries should be allowed to implement support measures for nascent export industries, and be granted more special and differential treatment under World Trade Organization agreements, the report said.

Support measures for exports are normally frowned upon in the WTO. AFP

WTO flirts with crisis as trading powers refuse to compromise

Agriculture remains key stumbling block

GENEVA—TRADING POWERS WERE FLIRTING with a crisis Saturday after tough negotiations at the WTO on a crucial step in global trade talks lurched into the weekend without any side willing to give way.

India's Minister of Commerce, Kamal Nath, admitted late in the night that he was ready to fly home Saturday after the G6 group of influential trading powers failed to make progress at World Trade Organization headquarters in Geneva.

"There will be no more G6 meeting," said Nath, a key player in the talks, effectively ruling out more immediate bids to bridge the gaps between the 149 nations over agricultural trade and industrial goods.

"We must recognize that we have not been able to move, that there remain major gaps and that there is crisis," he added.

A compromise among the G6 members is regarded as the key to resolving the near five-year-old deadlock, because their diverse economic interests are at the heart of disputes in the talks on cutting down barriers to trade by the end of the year.

"The green room will decide what the process will be" after the failure, said Nath, referring to an informal gathering on Saturday of 30 representatives of delegations from the 149 WTO members.

WTO chief Pascal Lamy has tried to coax them individually to give ground as developing and rich countries accused each other of trying to hijack the elusive Doha Round of multilateral trade talks.

Lamy had earlier issued a stern warning, saying governments could no longer afford to duck a deal after missing deadlines in recent years.

Brazilian Foreign Minister Celso Amorim gave a gloomy assessment of the chances of reaching a deal this weekend on the mathematics for cutting subsidies and tariffs.

Amorim, one of the key figures with Nath in the G20 group of emerging and developing nations, acknowledged that a crisis was looming.

But he pointed out that the situation was not unfamiliar at the WTO, and had sometimes helped squeeze a deal out of deadlock.

On Friday, the European Union appeared to inch closer to meeting the demands of Brazil and India on agriculture.

EU Trade Commissioner Peter Mandelson said Brussels was ready to go beyond its existing offer of a 46-percent cut in agricultural tariffs by moving closer to the 54-percent cut proposed by the G20.

But EU negotiators reiterated that other WTO players must offer something in return.

The EU and the United States are demanding deeper cuts in customs duties on imported industrial goods levied by emerging economies.

The spotlight was also being turned on the United States to offer deeper cuts in subsidies for its farmers.

The goal of the Doha Round of trade talks, which was launched in the Qatari capital in 2001, is to tear down trade barriers and help developing economies accelerate economic growth.

Negotiations were originally meant to finish in 2004, but the end-date was later pushed back to December 2006. AFP

Prosecutors want Lay, Skilling to pay $183M

HOUSTON—FEDERAL PROSECUTORS WANT ENRON corp. founder Kenneth Lay and former Chief Executive Jeffrey Skilling to fork over nearly $183 million in light of their convictions for perpetuating one of the biggest corporate frauds in US history.

In a court filing Friday, prosecutors asked US District Judge Sim Lake to order the newly convicted felons to turn over that amount "in proceeds of the fraud conspiracy," which includes bonuses, Skilling's gains from stock sales, and Lay's use of loans from Enron to pay down his personal debt, once at $100 million.

The government had already intended to seize about $57 million in Skilling's cash and property that have been frozen since he was indicted in February 2004, including his $5.1 million Mediterranean-style mansion in Houston.

Also marked for seizure was Lay's $5 million condominium in one of Houston's most exclusive high-rises.

Lay, 64, and Skilling, 52, were convicted of defrauding investors and employees by repeatedly lying about Enron's financial strength in the months before the company plummeted into bankruptcy protection in December 2001. AP

US consumer spending slows in May, gov't says

WASHINGTON—CONSUMER SPENDING slowed sharply in May as rising gasoline prices left Americans with less cash for other items, the government reported Friday.

The Commerce Department said that spending rose by just 0.4 percent last month after a 0.7 percent gain in April. Income growth also slowed to an advance of just 0.4 percent last month, reflecting weaker job growth.

The report on personal incomes and consumer spending provided further evidence that the economy slowed sharply in the spring as Americans were battered by rising gasoline prices, higher interest rates and a cooling housing market.

The government reported Thursday that the overall economy raced ahead at an annual rate of 5.6 percent in the January-March quarter, the fastest pace in 2½ years. Analysts believe growth has slowed to just half that amount in the current April-June quarter reflecting a sharp slowdown in consumer spending, which accounts for two-thirds of total economic activity. AP

Mittal sets sights on China

LONDON—MITTAL STEEL, THE WORLD'S NO. 1 steel company, which agreed a 25.6 billion euro ($32.54 billion) deal to acquire rival Arcelor, has its sights set on further acquisitions in emerging markets, such as China and India, its Chairman Lakshmi Mittal said.

"At this point, we will focus on China and India," Mittal told Reuters in an exclusive interview on Friday, when asked about the group's future acquisition strategy.

Mittal was speaking hours after Arcelor's shareholders rejected an alternative merger deal with Russian peer Severstal, clearing the way for a combination of the world's two largest steel-makers after a five-month bitter battle.

The Mittal-Arcelor feud has been one of Europe's most politically fraught corporate battles as Arcelor, created from firms in France, Spain and Luxembourg, had previously gone through years of restructuring and job cuts.

Mittal, 56 and one of the world's five richest men, said the combined group would be "at least five years ahead of competition" and spur consolidation across the sector. "It will also pave the way for other steel companies to take this sort of consolidation seriously," he said. Reuters

Central banks see further credit tightening

Financial markets volatile, analysts say

FRANKFURT—SOFTLY, SOFTLY SEEMS to be the message that central bankers are delivering on the path of global credit tightening that lies ahead.

Financial markets are volatile and the cheap money that sloshed around the global economy after several years of very low interest rates is drying up fast.

Investors and policymakers alike are growing increasingly uncertain about a possible global economic slowdown and whether it can dampen worsening inflationary pressures.

This makes for a combustible mix. One wrong step by central bankers could upset an exceptional period of global expansion.

"I compare it to crossing the river while feeling the stones," Bill White, economic adviser at the Bank for International Settlements, said after meetings with central bankers from around the world last weekend. "You have to do it very, very carefully."

The worry is that if central bankers soak up excess cash too rapidly, it will prompt investors accustomed to cheap funding to rush for the exits all at once and cause major financial disruptions.

So far, recent market sell-offs have been welcomed by central bankers as a necessary re-pricing of risk, but they know it could turn disorderly.

Little wonder that the Federal Reserve adopted a cautious tone on Thursday when it raised US rates for the 17th straight policy meeting and signaled that the increases it began two years ago may be near an end.

Similarly the European Central Bank, while it has left no doubt that credit tightening will continue this year, has stuck to a gradual pace.

ECB hawks might be gunning for faster increases but President Jean-Claude Trichet has given no hint so far that he wants to raise the tempo.

The Bank of Japan is poised to start raising interest rates, possibly next month but it too has shown no inclination to rush.

Money still cheap

This unusual period of near-simultaneous central bank tightening has led to global liquidity declining at its fastest rate in six years.

Goldman Sachs calculates that average three-month interest rates in eight major economies have risen 30 basis points over the last quarter, a pace not seen since a 40 basis point rise in mid-2000.

Yet these short-term rates remain way below levels seen in previous cycles. They average 3.5 percent today, which was the midpoint of the 2.2-4.8 percent range during the period of easing from late 2000 to mid-2003, Goldman said.

This would suggest that some more rate tightening remains in store. Morgan Stanley estimates 50 basis points.

Its currency strategist Stephen Jen said in a research note that real short-term rates today are around 1.5 percent, while in the 1990s they averaged 2 percent.

Both investment houses warn that costlier financing could disrupt global investment patterns.

Recent market volatility can be linked to withdrawal of liquidity. Two months after the ECB started raising rates in December, the high-yielding currencies of Iceland and New Zealand were hammered.

Two months after the Bank of Japan in March ended its quantitative easing policy -- under which it flooded the banking system with cash to combat deflation -- major stock indices, gold and other commodities and some emerging markets were hit.

Prospects this month that the Fed

Oil nears $74

LONDON—OIL ROSE TO NEARLY $74 A BARREL on Friday, within sight of record highs, on a positive outlook for oil demand and economic growth in top consumer the United States.

American drivers are expected to take to the roads in record numbers over the US July 4 holiday weekend, despite high fuel prices. The US economy grew at the fastest rate in 2½ years in the first quarter.

"All the growth numbers have been coming through stronger than expected," said Kevin Norrish, an oil analyst at Barclays Capital. US crude settled 41 cents higher at $73.93 a barrel after closing early ahead of Independence Day holiday.

Metals and other commodities also rallied as investor fears over interest rate rises and a possible weakening of the US economy receded. Copper jumped almost 4 percent in London and gold rose.

"It's money coming back in to all capital markets, after fears the Fed could put the economy into recession," said John Brady of ABN AMRO in New York.

US crude has risen from $20 in January 2002 and hit a record high of $75.35 in April as rising demand strained supplies and investors poured money into commodities.

Prices were drawing strength Friday from the continued closure of a key shipping channel in Louisiana, which has limited output at three refineries at a time of peak summer demand.

Underlining supply concerns caused by recent refinery glitches, US inventories of gasoline fell by 1 million barrels last week, while crude stocks declined 3.4 million barrels.

Iran's row with the West over its nuclear work, which traders fear could cut supplies from the world's fourth-largest oil exporter, has also supported prices this year.

The Group of Eight industrialized nations told Iran on Thursday to give a "clear and substantive response" next week to an offer by major powers over its nuclear plans. Tehran said that was unlikely. Reuters

Malacañang orders probe of power sale program

By Gil C. Cabacungan Jr.

MALACAÑANG HAS ORDERED A probe of the One-Day Power Sale program following complaints by industry groups that the "electricity sale" of the National Power Corporation and Manila Electric Co. have not only inconvenienced local manufacturers, but padded their costs as well.

Executive Secretary Eduardo Ermita told the INQUIRER that he had ordered enquirers to address complaints by the Philippine Chamber of Commerce and Industry (PCCI) and Federation of Philippine Industries (FPI) that the suspension of the ODPS on several occasions has had adverse repercussions on power-intensive industries.

As monitored by the Energy Regulatory Board, the ODPS scheme allows the discounted sale of NPC's unused capacity to self-generating companies, or companies which have their own power plants.

Under the scheme, Meralco handles the purchase of Napocor's surplus capacity for distribution to big customers within its franchise area, which includes Metro Manila.

However, some industries have complained that abrupt cancellation of the ODPS had forced them to run their power plants without adequate preparation.

Worse, ODPS customers unable to operate their generator sets were slapped with additional high demand charges that they claimed were unfair.

In an interview, Napocor president Cyril del Callar said the fate of ODPS depends on the ERB, especially with the recent launching of the Wholesale Electricity Spot Market (WESM), where big power users can now buy their electricity at market driven prices.

While WESM is now in place, industries are still waiting for clearer guidelines, stressing that while they can source their electricity directly from big power producers, they are still at the mercy of Meralco, which controls the transmission lines in its huge franchise area.

Pending WESM, they also complained that NPC and Meralco seem to be dragging their feet with regards the restoration of ODPS.

Earlier, PCCI president Donald Dee said that inasmuch as ODPS grants discounts to companies, its suspension would impact negatively on power-intensive industries, like cement and steel plants.

"I hope they (NPC and Meralco) would be able to immediately communicate with industries about planned suspensions. They should also be able to say when the ODPS can be implemented again," Dee added.

Business groups claimed that the ODPS cancellations favor Napocor and Meralco through increased transmission charges because users were charged more for their unplanned high electricity demand. Industry estimates showed that the cost of ODPS cancellations exceed P20 million a day.

RP questions Malaysia auto policy

By Ronnel W. Domingo

THE PHILIPPINES AND OTHER members of the Association of South-east Asian Nations have opposed the non-tariff barriers to vehicle imports imposed by Malaysia, on grounds that this runs counter to efforts toward free trade within the region.

According to officials, Kuala Lumpur was still protecting Malaysia's national cars and other domestic products contrary to rules of the Asean Free Trade Agreement and World Trade Organization.

They said such barriers were laid out in a National Auto Policy that was promulgated last March, despite Asean members having agreed to reduce tariffs on imported completely built vehicles to 5 percent from 20 percent.

The policy requires, for instance, the issuance of approval permits prior to importation.

Malaysia also said that it will only allow the entry of the equivalent of a maximum 10 percent of Malaysia's vehicle production, not counting panel vans, trucks and buses.

A third barrier is the use of customs valuation on imports of completely built units, instead of using the valuation methods provided for in the WTO's General Agreements on Tariffs and Trade.

Finally, the sources said Malaysia's

Industrial Adjustment Fund serves to deter vehicle importation despite tariff reduction under AFTA.

With the IAF, the Malaysian government provides support by way of excise tax credits—to its local industry based on higher levels of local content.

Government support under IAF also provides relatively greater help to large-scale assemblers and exporters, sources said.

They said these barriers primarily hinder shipments from Indonesia, the Philippines and Thailand as these make the Malaysian market large closed to Asean imports.

With some 546,000 units sold in 2005, Malaysia is the region's second largest auto market and is home to locally assembled vehicles like Proton and Perodua.

Casiño's fantasy

TEDDY CASIÑO, PARTY LIST REPRESENTATIVE of Bayan Muna, and my favorite communist (oops, progressive), flashed his boyish charm on a TV talk show the other day.

He talked about the President's decision to spend P1 billion for the Armed Forces to open a final offensive against the NPA. He said that it would be better to spend the money to wipe out injustice, inequality and poverty, which are the root causes of the NPA rebellion.

If Casiño proposes the equality of a communist society where everybody is equally hungry, thanks, but no thanks. If he means the equality of a centrally managed economy, he can have it.

If he refers to the equality of the NPA's revolutionary tax system where everything that moves or grows in the far-flung barrios is taxed 10 percent of market value, I prefer the complicated tax structure of the internal revenue code.

And I would rather go through a tax audit by a BIR examiner than tangle with an NPA terrorist/extortionist gang.

A friend of mine raises rice in Albay. He steadfastly refuses to part with 10 percent of his harvest to the NPA. But he gladly shares the going rate of one-third of whatever any hard-working reaper, NPA or not, brings in. Now, that is equality.

I agree that there is a lot of injustice around. I have said more than once that we have the best justice system—that money can buy. But is Casiño proposing to replace our justice system, flawed as it may be, with the NPA's kangaroo courts? Does he want to install a secret police, too?

As to the problem of poverty, the far-flung barrios terrorized by the NPA grovel in abject poverty precisely because the NPA bleeds the poor folks half to death. Not only that, no investor would like to create jobs in areas terrorized by the NPA.

My friend Atoy closed down his small sari-sari store when the NPA told him to shell out P4,000 every month in fixed revolutionary tax (it was really an excise tax).

There are dozens of countries in the Third World much poorer than the Philippines. These countries do not have a terrorist network like the NPA. Why so? Maybe because we do not massacre communists by the hundreds of thousands, as Suharto did in Indonesia.

QUESTIONS OF POLICIES

Honesto C. General

Hey, I am not, of course, proposing that the government mounts a pogrom, or even draw up a hit list of communists.

Also, our democratic system has a high threshold of tolerance for the opposition, including communist front organizations like Bayan Muna and Anak Pawis.

The root cause of the communist rebellion is not, repeat, not inequality, injustice, or poverty. The root cause is that Filipino communists like Casiño simply refuse to admit that Communism, as a way of life, has been totally discredited worldwide. The workers' paradise was pure hell.

In Germany, hundreds of billions of dollars in federal funds have been spent to bring up the former East Germany to the same level of development as the former West. And there is no end in sight.

What is worse, after 80 years of Communist rule, the East German has become lazy, having been spoiled by communist dole-outs.

South Korea has built itself up to be an economic powerhouse. North Korea is teaching its citizens how to eat grass.

Vietnam and the former satellite countries in Eastern Europe are learning to bask in the sunlight of a free and open market economy.

Naturally, communists like Teddy Casiño do not want the government to wipe out the NPA, the terrorist/extortionist fundraiser. But no political party should have been allowed to shoot its way into the House of Representatives.

Teddy Casiño's unending fantasy is that the communist movement here will outlive Philippine democracy. Fat chance.

Our democracy, with all its faults, is strong enough to defend itself even as communists like Teddy Casiño use the rule of law to their advantage.

Teddy Casiño and his fellow communists, in their hard-headedness, refuse to admit that recent world history has proved beyond all doubt that Communism carries within its bosom the seeds of its own destruction.

GOVERNMENT OFFICIALS IN NAGA CITY have made public its geographic information system (GIS) to allow Google Earth enthusiasts to play around with the information, INQ7.net learned.

Google Earth is free software application that allows people to zoom in on satellite photos of the world. People can literally view any country in the world using this nifty computer program.

The Philippine Makeover blog (<http://www.mmmakeover.blogspot.com/>) said the Naga City government has challenged people to create Google Earth maps out of the GIS information.

Filipino journalist Roby Alampay and a United States-based Filipino urban planning professional Benjie dela Peña run the blog. In its latest post, the Philippine Makeover blog noted Naga City has also released a three-dimensional map of the city, which could be viewed on Google Earth.

The local government's GIS information can now be downloaded at <http://gis.naga.gov.ph/pmwiki/pmwiki.php/Main/Data>. Alampay and Dela Peña said many Filipinos are now discovering Google Earth.

For Philippine history buffs, Google Earth now offers a useful "map" or "KMZs" of sites of the World War II battles fought in the country.

One Google Earth map identifies the exact locations of known volcanoes throughout the archipelago. Two maps also provide complete information on the potential and existing mining sites in the country.

There is now also a Google Earth map at all Philippine airports.

Alampay and Dela Peña said they have started to compile links to all these maps in "Google Earth Philippines" (www.google.earthphilippines.pbwiki.com).

Both are now inviting people to add to its growing list of Google Earth maps.

Naga City was the recent addition to Google Earth Philippines' growing list.

The local government has allowed them access to GIS information that has been used to visualize city data.

"We've just been running crazy with Google Earth now that Metro Manila is being rendered in high-resolution. We've been swapping KMZs (Google Earth markers) until finally we put up the [Google Earth Philippines]. Both are designed to set up a one-stop shop for Google Earth stuff (KMZs, Sketchup models, maps, etc.) for the Philippines," Alampay said in an e-mail.

Google Earth Philippines also includes maps to Metro Manila landmarks, hydroelectric and geothermal plants, world heritage sites in the country, mass transit, intact forests (plotted by Greenpeace), and locations and products of local agrarian reform beneficiaries.

A virtual helicopter tour of the Philippines, courtesy of "Our Awesome Planet" blog of Filipino Anton Diaz, was also added.

The applications of Google Earth Philippines are endless, Alampay continued, as he suggested several ideas on how Google Earth can be used to point out the shrinking "green zones" in cities to local government officials.

Dela Peña and Alampay hope to encourage people to use Google Earth Philippines "to get people talking about urban planning issues."

Both Alampay and Dela Peña have created a blog, dubbed "Great Manila Makeover"

(<http://mmmakeover.blogspot.com/>), which they have renamed Philippine Makeover, to encourage Filipinos to see Philippines in a different light.

"I'm an urban planner and I've been trying to get urban planning issues on the table in Metro Manila—and get people to talk about our built fabric. I was frustrated by the lack of information available online. Then Google Earth updated so the high-resolution telemetry was a big bonus. Roby came up with the idea for the Great Manila Makeover to get people to reimagine the city, which is my passion," said Dela Peña in an online chat.

Ironically, both founders are now living outside the Philippines. Yet they share the vision and dream of rebuilding the country, starting with Metro Manila.

"It's so easy with Google Earth to see that we're one country. It's so easy to link to each other. It's easy to bridge investors with farmers. To point out potential green zones to local officials. At least it's easy to picture it while looking at the country 'from a distance.' Corny but true. If we can picture it, we should be able to do it," added Alampay.

Dela Peña noted that cities are the largest artifacts of civilization.

"We need to understand our cities if we want to understand our culture. To put it another way, the social, political, economic and cultural issues we face all have spatial manifestations—and are shaped by the fabric of our built environment. Like the rest of the world, we are rapidly urbanizing—up to 60 percent according to the last census estimate. When we begin the work of improving our cities, we begin the real work of improving the (day to day) quality of life of our citizens," he stressed.

By next year, Sarmiento said the NTC expects to accept applications among firms moving to digital TV. In 2010, he said NTC will no longer accept applications for companies wanting to offer analog TV.

Digital television is a telecommunication system for broadcasting moving pictures and sound by means of digital signals, in contrast to analog signals in analog (traditional) TV. It uses digital modulation data, which is digitally compressed and requires decoding by a specially designed television set or a standard receiver with a set-top box.

Digital television has several advantages over traditional TV, the most significant being use of a smaller channel bandwidth. This frees up space for more digital channels, other non-television services such as pay-multimedia services and the generation of revenue from the sales of frequency spectrum taken by analog TV. There are also special services such as multicasting (more than one program on the same channel), electronic program guides and interactivity.

Digital television often has a superior image, audio quality and better reception than analog. However, it should be noted that digital television picture technology is still in its early stages and there are many advances yet to be made in eliminating picture defects not present on analog television or motion picture cinema.

Microsoft Philippines to open mobile division

Erwin Oliva
Contributor

MICROSOFT PHILIPPINES WILL open a mobile division starting this month, the company's top executive told Infotech.

Microsoft Philippines Managing Director Antonio "TJ" Javier said the still-unnamed mobile division will focus on growing the local subsidiary's market share and "mindshare" in the mobile business.

Javier said people have been hired to man this division but declined to name who these people are.

"This [division] will focus on the handset and applications," the Microsoft Philippines executive added.

Microsoft Philippines is now the software company's subsidiary in the Asia Pacific region that represents the emerging markets. With this, the local subsidiary has been getting additional funding and resources to explore new markets and products, and the opening of the mobile division is one of the results, Javier said.

It was not surprising for Microsoft to finally make its presence felt in the Philippine mobile market.

During last week's CommunicAsia 2006, Microsoft had one of the biggest booths in the annual telecommunications exhibit and conference held every year in Singapore.

At its booth, Microsoft displayed numerous mobile handsets that now run Microsoft's mobile phone software operating system.

Javier said the mobile division will also focus on bringing mobile applications to the local market.

He said that Microsoft Philippines currently has programs for families of overseas Filipino workers (OFWs) who regularly use "Microsoft labs" set up abroad to stay in touch with their loved ones.

The Microsoft executive said the local subsidiary has a new project with the Overseas Workers Welfare Administration. This project will experiment on a service that will allow OFWs to speak with their families utilizing some of the most cost-effective methods such as wi-fi and Mobile Voice over Internet Protocol or VoIP and to remit their earnings and digitally transfer them to their designated beneficiaries from a Windows Mobile 5.0 (wi-fi and cellular-enabled) device.

The first phase of this trial with OFWs is currently underway, Javier added.

NTC scraps blacklisting plans for text spam

By Erwin Oliva
Contributor

THE NATIONAL TELECOMMUNICATIONS Commission (NTC) has decided to scrap plans to blacklist firms found spamming mobile phone subscribers with unsolicited text messages, an official told Infotech.

Instead, the agency has reverted to its original policy that puts the burden back to subscribers who "opt-in" or agree to a particular commercial and promotional advertisements via text messaging, NTC Deputy Commissioner Jorge Sarmiento said.

The NTC has initially proposed the blacklisting system, dubbed "not-to-text." However, Sarmiento said the content providers and mobile phone operators opposed this idea.

Eventually, the white-listing approach,

"dubbed text-me," was pushed. Mobile phone operators and content providers opposed this plan again, arguing it violates privacy issues, Sarmiento said.

Meanwhile, the NTC has ordered a moratorium on mobile broadcast text messaging until it finalizes its rules. This came after mounting complaints from local subscribers who were receiving numerous unsolicited text messages despite opting-out to specific commercial or promotional advertisements.

The revised guideline for broadcast text messaging, which considers all these changes, will come out soon, the official added.

Sarmiento said the NTC would still support stiffer penalties to those who continue to ignore the agency's rules, and the registration of all content providers.

CARMEN BULK WATER SUPPLY PROJECT

INVITATION TO SUBMIT EXPRESSIONS OF INTEREST AND CALL FOR REGISTRATION

The Metropolitan Cebu Water District ("MCWD") is inviting potential proponents/bidders/challengers to express their interest in the prospective solicitation of comparative or competitive proposals ("Swiss Challenge") to finance, design, construct, own, operate and maintain raw water abstraction, treatment and transmission facilities intended to extract and treat raw water principally from the Luyang-Cantunog River located in the Municipality of Carmen, Cebu Province, and deliver up to 40,000 cubic meters per day of bulk potable water through a transmission pipeline to the MCWD distribution system under a suitable public-private partnership agreement for a fixed concession period ("Project"). The Project is being developed and procured following the unsolicited proposal process prescribed under Republic Act No. 6957, as amended, and its Implementing Rules and Regulations ("BOT Law"). The original proponent of the Project, whose unsolicited proposal will be the subject of the Swiss Challenge, is the Ayala Corp./Manila Water Co./Statewide Inc. Consortium.

MCWD, through the BOT Center of the Department of Trade and Industry, has engaged the International Finance Corporation ("IFC") as its transaction advisor for this Project.

Pursuant to Section 4 of the BOT Law and Section 2.5 of its Implementing Rules and Regulations, all interested parties are asked to signify their interest and register as possible proponents/bidders/challengers by submitting to MCWD (copy furnished IFC), at the addresses indicated below, their letter of intent and company profile with the following information:

1. Name of proponent
2. Business address(es) no. fax/no. formal address
3. Number of years in operation
4. Organizational and ownership structure
5. Field of specialization
6. Key personnel (corporate officers and key staff members)
7. List of completed projects (brief description, types of services, location, project cost/contract amount, implementation period, client) and
8. Latest audited financial statements (income statement and balance sheet).

All expressions of interest must be submitted on or before July 28, 2006. Duly registered proponents will be entitled to receive project updates from MCWD.

THIS INVITATION OR CALL FOR REGISTRATION IS NOT THE START OF THE FORMAL SOLICITATION OF COMPARATIVE/COMPETITIVE PROPOSALS. The submission of expressions of interest is not a bidding requirement and will not qualify or disqualify potential bidders from participating in the Swiss Challenge.

NTC, private sector working on transition to digital TV

By Erwin Oliva

BROADCASTING FIRMS and the National Telecommunications Commission (NTC) are now working on guidelines to the planned transition to digital television in 2015 in the Philippines, an NTC official told Infotech.

NTC Deputy Commissioner

Jorge Sarmiento said the agency and representatives of the local industry have formed a technical working group to work on the government guidelines to the transition to digital TV.

The NTC official said the rules and procedures for the transition are expected to be ready by next month.

Tech Support and Maintenance for SMBs: Prevention and Cure

By Ricky Banang, Country Manager, Intel Microelectronics Philippines, Inc.

Investment in information technology by small and medium business (SMBs) in Asia is skyrocketing. After weathering the economic downturn, SMBs are now looking to grow their business using information technology (IT), with analysts predicting a remarkable increase of 19% in SMB technology spending in 2004.¹ However, buying hardware is only the first step. The way this technology is managed will greatly affect how profitable the investment will be.

Support and maintenance costs SMBs a great deal of time and money. According to Gartner, the purchase price of a new personal computer (PC) accounts for only 20 to 30 per cent of the total cost of owning that PC, with the rest going to supporting and maintaining this hardware.² These support costs rise substantially for older systems, driving up the operational expenses that comprise most of the 70 to 80 per cent of the total cost of owning a computer.³

With IT investment surging and system complexity increasing, IT support is crucial to all businesses. System downtime often translates to lost business. So how should an SMB effectively manage its IT system?

The Quick Cure

When you're ill, you usually see a doctor. If you're technology shows symptoms of a glitch, call your "digital doctor" - your IT vendor help desk. Below are some tips to assist the help desk technician assess and fix the problem:

Right problem, right person

The most important element to remember when talking to a helpdesk is patience! Just as your doctor takes time to walk through your symptoms before developing a diagnosis, help desk technicians must also walk through your system's symptoms. Try to be patient as the technician assesses your problem and identifies a solution.

Occasionally, the help desk technician may require a second opinion to accurately pin point the cause of the problem. Just as you would seek the advice of a medical specialist, don't be afraid to ask for assistance from a higher level engineer or manager if needed. It can sometimes save quite a bit of time.

Keep Detailed Logs

Like doctors keep records of your medical history, keep a record each of your technical problems and the solutions offered by the helpdesk. The effort spent documenting problems can help reduce the long-term costs of your system support, as you will know how to resolve these problems if they arise again.

The Preventative Approach

No one likes being ill, which is why the healthcare concept of "prevention" rather than "cure" is growing in popularity. Most people would rather avoid getting sick, rather than visiting a doctor on a regular basis. Adopting a preventative approach also works for technology systems. In the case of technology, prevention starts with good technology planning. Below are a few considerations to help prevent system downtime and reduce maintenance costs.

Regular PC Replacement Program

Regardless of brand, your technology should be current. The optimum lifecycle is three years for a desktop PC and two years for notebooks. Beyond this timeframe, maintenance and upgrades can cost more than replacing the entire PC! It may sound strange, but without scheduling regular updates, companies tend to practice a "crash and burn" approach to IT maintenance. By replacing computers only when they fail, they not only miss out on the productivity gains of more current computers, but they also wind up with dozens of different hardware configurations and out-of-date software, costing more in ongoing maintenance long term. Orchestrating technical support for such a haphazard system will be a full time job, even if you only have a few of these ailing computers.

Q: Why buy the best PC I can afford?

A: A sufficiently powerful, balanced system allows multitasking to operate effectively. For example, PCs equipped with the latest technologies such as the Intel® Pentium® D processor enables users to multitask and process background tasks more efficiently. With two processor cores, a PC can handle more applications or programs at one time. This means, more system maintenance, such as virus software, backup and indexing, can occur while you are doing work, which means less time spent on the phone trying to fix problems.

Because aging computers can't handle complex applications, they can be a huge IT burden. This sidetracks you from your core business responsibilities and increases maintenance overhead, leading to a more complex and costly system. The older the PC, the more costs accumulate. Time, human resources and component parts are required and repairs can be expensive.

Keeping your system simple

Keeping your system simple by standardizing hardware and software can lower the support costs in the long run. Imagine how much time and effort is wasted re-inventing the wheel if you need to troubleshoot the same problem of your PC's from different manufacturers.

Conclusion

Managing an IT system should be looked at as an opportunity, not a burden. When your system is running smoothly, its benefits cannot be underestimated. A study in the U.S. found that 93% of all companies that lost their data for 10 days or more filed for bankruptcy within one year of the disaster. A full shutdown like this is uncommon. It usually only results when a company does little or nothing to maintain their IT system's integrity. A little downtime can be all the time your competitors need to move in. But with these simple maintenance techniques, you will be ahead of the game.

P100B just change in East Asia's infra boom

Solon wants new gov't agency to protect private firms' massive investments

By Gil C. Cabacungan Jr.

PRESIDENT MACAPAGAL ARROYO's plan to pour in P100 billion (roughly $2 billion) to develop the country's infrastructure sounds impressive.

But not when you consider what the entire East Asia region will spend in the next five years for infrastructure—$165 billion.

To keep pace with its neighbors, the Philippines will need to rely more on private investors putting their money in toll roads, seaports and airports, and power plants under a build-operate-and-transfer mode in the next five years if it plans to keep at pace with the economic growth of its deep-pocketed neighbors.

This is why Arroyo economic adviser and Albay Rep. Joey Sarte Salceda is pushing for the establishment of a BOT Authority to be chaired by the President herself that would ensure that nightmarish experiences by foreign investors in high-profile BOT projects such as the Ninoy Aquino International Airport Terminal 3 project of Philippine International Air Terminals Co. Inc. and Impsa's Caliraya-Botocan-Kalayaan power plant in Laguna.

"With the President taking a hands-on control of these projects, the proposed BOT Authority should firm-up government's commitment and full attention in identifying critical areas of private sector participation in our infrastructure development to facilitate economic activities in our urban and regional growth areas" Salceda says.

Over the next four years, Salceda says East Asia would require $165 billion to finance its infrastructure requirements. "As part of the fastest-growing region in the world, the Philippines should be well prepared in capturing considerable investments with a sound infrastructure policy framework that is both comprehensive and responsive in facilitating economic growth" Salceda said.

The bulk of East Asia's infrastructure requirements would still be in power generation at $60 billion, followed by road networks at $30 billion, telecoms with $20 billion, water and sanitation at $20 billion and railways with $15 billion.

With the BOT Authority, Salceda expects improved central oversight of the planning and coordination of investments. "We should do away with the propensity of line agencies to MERCY Palabras, 46, says finding work as a laborer in the newly established coco coir plant in her town in San Isidro in Davao Oriental augments her family's income.

DENNIS JAY SANTOS/PDI MINDANAO BUREAU

Going nuts over coconut

By Dennis S. Santos

SAN ISIDRO, DAVAO ORIENTAL—Some 70 percent of the more than 30,000 people here rely on coconut farming. The rest are into fishing or other forms of small-scale livelihood.

It has been like this for the four decade history of the province.

Mayor Apolinar Ruelo Sr. says the everyday stark reality of poverty grapples many marginalized farmers here where the unemployment rate is very high.

"Roughly only 10 percent (of the people in San Isidro) are employed in various offices," Ruelo says.

He says coconut farming alone cannot provide for a family's need. Seeing the need to diversify their livelihood, farmers recently planted other high value crops such as mango, banana and coffee.

But the coconut industry will always be the main economic drive for many of the farmers here; many of them do not own the land they till.

The province's 11 towns, San Isidro included, are considered the country's coconut capital, supplying the largest volume of copra.

But earnings are erratic because copra's market price varies.

A new group is offering some hope to the farmers.

Hope industry

Rotchie Ravelo, plant manager of the Davao Oriental Coco Husk Social Enterprise Inc., a business enterprise set up only two years ago, offers some answers.

Ravelo says their firm, initiated by two nongovernment organizations—the Kalumonan Development Center Inc. and Unlad Kabayan Migrant Services Foundation Inc., was created "specifically to provide jobs and augment the coconut farmers' income."

It also wants to help the Overseas Filipino Workers (OFW), who are residents of this town, to put their money into good use by co-investing in the industry.

The group buys coconut husks, which has been considered as waste product.

Coconut farmers can now earn as much as P3,000 per harvest, depending on the volume,

"The farmers don't even have to go to our plant to sell their husks, since we go around and buy from them," Ravelo says.

The raw coconut husks are then processed into useful material such as coco coir or coir fiber and the coir dust or coco peat.

Coco fiber has many industrial purposes like fillings for furniture, for production of brushes, carpets, rugs, doormats, twines and even ornaments.

It was also recently used in making "geotextile," a material for making bonded mats that are effective for soil erosion and drainage control.

China, for instance, makes use of the coco coir as the main component in making lumber "board."

The coco dust—which is the by-product of coir fiber making—in turn can be used as soil conditioner, found to be useful for horticulture activities and banana growers.

With a start-up capital of P1.5 million, the company started its operations in 2004 with only four office staff workers and 16 laborers.

Today the company's capital stands at more than P5 million, and employs more than 60.

Ravelo is confident they are making headway and will consider expanding their capacity.

Company's mission

"This is a multi-sectoral project," he says. What the company earns goes to their expansion project.

The plant manufactures about 50 tons of coco fiber a month, but their market in China demands at least 100 tons.

Ravelo says many are questioning why they are into an enterprise when they are an NGO. He says the company's ownership will eventually be turned over to the farmers themselves, through a "multi-stakeholder" scheme.

"And once they learn to operate the growing company, the farmers themselves will be the one to run and manage it."

Mercy Palabras, 40, a plant laborer, says that because of the opportunity to work, she can now augment the meager salary of her husband.

"It has somewhat eased my financial problem," she says.

ONCE SAT IN A meeting between my late boss, Tomas B. Aguirre, a banker's banker but whom I admired more for his innate sense of marketing, and the manager of his hotel property.

Perhaps to dazzle and distract him from the monthly report showing yet another dismal occupancy rate, the hotel manager proudly announced, "Sir, we just bought an ice-making machine."

"What we need is a customer-making machine," was the quick retort of Aguirre.

Ouch. The truth hurts. This incident came to mind as I perused the advertising industry's excellent trade paper, Adobo.

In that one issue alone, you will read indications that the next generation of our advertising professionals are being led to believe that advertisers should embrace "ice-making machines" (creative awards) rather than "customer-making machines" (increased market shares)."

Why, a consultant of a multinational advertising agency even proclaimed in the same magazine that "Improving the quality of our product is something that our clients ask us to do, and to them, winning at Cannes is the (ever rising) bar for which we must aim."

Premium on awards

I wonder which of his clients put more premium on winning awards than increasing share points when evaluating advertising?

Perhaps it is wiser if we heed the advice of Phil Dusenberry, the creative person who turned BBDO into a creative powerhouse.

Dusenberry said: "When you boil it all down, the purpose of any business is to improve conditions so that your business performs better. In my line of work, the goal has been to create great ads for the client so that sales pick up. I can't express it any simpler than that. Clients advertise with one overriding objective: sell more stuff."

Sure, if the creative work that sells stuff wins awards, great.

But what if the creative work sells a lot of stuff but doesn't win awards? Is that bad?

Don't get me wrong. I believe in creative awards.

A creative award is a great motivation for creative people to come up with better work.

Lee Clow, a well-known creative, sums it up well. He said: "You have to remember that creative people have a combination of giant egos and naïve insecurity. They need validation for their work, and they don't necessarily get that from clients. Instead they go looking for that, and a smidgen of self-esteem, from their peers."

Moving the brand

But I draw the line when the moving motivation in doing creatives is to win awards rather than to move the brand.

You want an ego massage? Go spend your own money, and not the client's.

So, do award-winning commercials sell?

To get answers to the bedeviling question, "Do award-winning commercials sell?" the Leo Burnett Co. in 1992 and 1993 conducted a study of the 200 most-awarded commercials in the world.

Despite the difficulty of not having a single set of criteria to judge effectiveness because of varying goals and standards, the study revealed that 86 percent of the 200 commercials were associated with marketplace success.

But, take note that the majority of the award-winning commercials reviewed were those of major recognizable brands. Successful brands. Major spending accounts of the advertising agencies. Not some obscure clients enticed with free "scam ads."

Local scene

So, what's happening in the local scene?

Canute, Cannes or 'camote'?

Well, looking again at the trade magazine Adobo, if creative awards are measurements of great work for clients, then the major advertisers in the country are being short-changed.

Here's a client-list of some of the Philippine winners in the "Asia Pacific Advertising Festival 2006."

Consuelo Foundation. Greenpeace. Childhope. Palmer Asia.

Vaseline. And Lamy pens.

I know Vaseline.

But what happened to the advertising of those major advertisers who provide the money for the advertising agency folks to go to Cannes?

Do these results mean that the non-winning clients, for example, of the declared Philippine Hottest Agency (according to Campaign Brief Asia) like FedEx, Pepsi, Pizza Hut, and even our Department of Tourism are getting lousy creative work?

Which local client handled by them leapfrogged from obscurity to market leadership because of award-winning advertising?

Just a question, not a criticism. Nor a putdown. You have to admire these guys for continuously reaching for a Cannes gold award.

But one cannot help but ask the question: Why have award-winning agencies not concentrated on producing award-winning creatives for their bread-and-butter clients?

Why the need to pick up obscure non-advertising clients to produce award-winning advertising?

Maybe self-serving creativity goes too far?

"People say it is easier to create a memorable advertisement than it is to create an advertisement that makes the product memorable. A number of tests have proved that people often remember a commercial, but not a product," according to a study.

The key to avoiding this from happening is hard work. Harder work.

Every professionally run advertising agency has a proprietary formula on how to come up with big selling ideas.

Dusenberry describe theirs as RAISE (Research, Analysis, Insight, Strategy and Execution). This is the kind of stuff that creatives (lazy creatives) hate. Where no execution is done or approved until they've got the basics right.

Brilliant award-winning idea but off-strategy? Waste basket.

If the strategy is right but the execution is average, the brand will continue to grow. But if the strategy is wrong, even an award-winning ad cannot save a brand's decline.

Creatives today are being trained to look at executions and their award-winning potential rather than concentrating on coming up with insightful ideas based on a sound strategy to produce market-busting executions. "Ice-making," rather than "customer-making."

And yet it's a common creative paradox: the narrower your focus; and the more precise the positioning, the more room you have to roam.

The local creative community will do well to look at the current advertising of Apple computers, the icon of hip. It's a side-by-side hard-working demonstration commercial, the favorite format of Procter & Gamble.

In the commercial, the advantages of Apple versus PCs are spelled out clearly without sacrificing the likeability factor of the commercial.

The brand is central to the story.

Contrast this with the trend to produce hip video-joke commercials and then, as an afterthought, just attaching the name of the brand in the end.

The agency wins, but the client loses every time this happens.

Maybe the clients have discovered that they have been bankrolling unnecessarily the ego massaging of their agencies.

How else can you explain the diminishing role of advertising agencies in the clients' marketing activities and their diminishing income?

In a recent article, David Guerrero of the local BBDO office cited the legend of King Canute and likened him to those who are preaching discipline in creativity and trying to stop the onslaught of award-oriented advertising.

Having read on King Canute, it seems more appropriate that King Canute is compared to today's advertising client being flattered no end by agencies that he, Canute, can do no wrong if his company wins creative awards.

So with the awards in hand, he tries to stop the wave of harder-working competition.

Well, when the King Canute client gets wet, he can always tell his agency to go and plant camote.

create their own infrastructure corporations that invariably add to the confusion of a serious infrastructure policy framework."

Salceda explains that the proposed BOT Authority would also spearhead international road shows to attract investments for infrastructure in the country.

The BOT Authority, which will have a multi-agency policy-making committee, should put to rest questions on policy and turf in the determination and implementation of public-private partnerships in infrastructure investments," says Salceda who cited the lack of safeguards in BOT rules that most local and foreign investors require before they commit their funds into the country.

The BOT Authority will take charge of implementing the President's Infrastructure Roadmap which would detail a countrywide survey of possible private investments in infrastructure development especially in the rural areas such as water systems, ports, roads and bridges, abattoirs and hospitals.

The Infrastructure Roadmap, the President's follow-up to her fiscal road map, would not only cater to institutional investors abroad but can also tap investments from Overseas Filipino Workers (OFWs). "An Infrastructure Roadmap would allow our OFWs to look into areas of investments in their own localities thereby fostering an 'engagement' into the infrastructure development of their hometowns."

"We are now reaping the gains of our resolve to implement the fiscal reform program. With encouraging feedback from credit rating agencies, conditions will now enable us to lower the cost of financing from the private sector in infrastructure investments," he says.

The Infrastructure Roadmap will address the declining share of infrastructure in the budget. From 2001 to 2005, the Philippines only spent an average of 2.42 percent of gross domestic product for infrastructure development compared to Thailand and Vietnam which spends more than 7 percent of their GDP to finance their infrastructure requirements.

Salceda says that not only does the country spend too little but that its infrastructure quality as ranked by the World Competitiveness Report falls below the average compared to the fast-growing economies of East Asia such as Malaysia, Thailand, China, Indonesia and Singapore.

The World Bank is concerned over government's spending cuts, saying that further expenditure restraints for infrastructure, basic services and poverty reduction efforts would seriously undermine the country's fiscal sustainability.

In a draft paper presented during the recent 2006 Philippine Development Forum, the World Bank said expenditure cuts from 19.5 percent in 2003 to 17.5 percent in 2005 across major spending categories except interest payments "can only adversely affect public sector efficiency and poverty reduction efforts."

While the World Bank recognizes as significant the 2-percent reduction in the national government deficit over the last two years, it was worried that the government has achieved a balanced at the expense of growth and other development objectives.

ful business organizations.

They are beginning to realize that they themselves must learn how to craft their own unique solutions to the equally unique problems they face.

But if conventional management wisdom is no longer to be believed, what then constitutes the new orthodoxy, if indeed there is one?

What are the new rules of the game, if there are any? What new individual and organizational competencies must be developed to survive these challenging times?

As a first serious step to address these questions, the Management Association of the Philippines (MAP) decided recently to organize a series of management forums to provide the appropriate venue for management professionals to dialogue on the management issues of the day.

This series of forums will look at how Philippine businesses are coping under hostile business conditions. It seeks to discover what bold and innovative solutions have been adopted by these companies in these trying and challenging times to survive and to create value for their shareholders.

For this purpose, MAP through its management development committee, has invited as keynote speakers in the series the CEOs or chairs of four selected business corporations known for their innovative approaches to strategy.

These invited speakers will present their respective strategic platforms before a group of top-level managers, HRM practitioners and academics. These presentations will be followed by open forums in which the strategies will be extensively discussed.

For this year's series, MAP has invited the following as keynote speakers:

• Esther C. Tan, chair of Sun Life of Canada (Philippines) Inc.;

• Noel C. Oñate, chair, Asian Spirit;

• Alfredo I. Ayala, CEO of Livelt Solutions Inc. (the BPO holding company of Ayala); and • Carlos C. Ejercito, president and CEO of the United Laboratories Group of Companies.

The open forums will be led by the following session coordinators:

• Gregorio S. Navarro, managing partner and CEO, Punongbayan and Araullo;

• Jesus G. Gallegos, professor, Asian Institute of Management;

• Philip E. Juico of the Graduate School of Business, DLSU Professional Schools Inc.; and

• Victor L. Magdaraog, vice president and COO, SGV Development Dimensions International.

MAP has also assembled a panel of experts representing different areas of management to help enliven the discussions at each of the four sessions scheduled for this year.

The first of the series will be held on Thursday, July 13, from 9 a.m. to 11:30 a.m. at the Conservatory of The Peninsula Manila.

Foundations celebrate CSR week

THE LEAGUE OF CORPORATE Foundations (LCF) will tap local and international experts on corporate social responsibility (CSR) during the LCF "CSR Expo 2006: Let's Take CSR to Heart," LCF announced during the event's launching at the Cultural Hall of Petron MegaPlaza Building in Makati City.

The three-day expo, to be held on July 5-7, 2006 at the Every Nation Leadership Institute in Bonifacio Global City (between Market! Market! and International School Manila), aims to integrate corporate social responsibility into all levels of businesses in the country and make CSR everybody's business.

"We hope to reach out to as many companies regardless of size—whether small, medium or large—to take CSR to heart. This expo will show how we overcome the challenges in integrating CSR into our main strategy as companies; it is a celebration for our success as corporate citizens," LCF president and Mirant Philippines Foundation executive director Bobby Calingo said.

The CSR Expo 2006 will feature talks and plenary sessions with local CEOs and CSR experts and international speakers such as Dr. Emmett Carson, president and CEO of The Minneapolis Foundation and former chairman of the Council on Foundations, (USA); Nileema Noble, United Nations resident coordinator in the Philippines; Bob Grove, managing director for Southeast Asia, Edelman Singapore; Anne-Marce Huxley, founder of Models of Success and Sustainability and director of CSR Summit 2005 (Australia); and Duncan Power and John Winkett, executive director and deputy director of Charities Aid Foundation (Australia), respectively.

The annual event will unite small, medium and large businesses in the Philippines for the common cause of providing system-wide business solutions to social problems in the country.

"Over the last few years, we have been organizing this event for the main purpose of sharing the message of hope throughout the public, especially among the marginalized sectors of society. It also provides a venue wherein those of us in the business, government and civil society can share experiences and look for synergy to ensure that our efforts have a direct and sustainable impact," Petron Corp. president Khalid Al-Fudhaid said.

"While we compete very aggressively in the market, when it comes to CSR we're on the same side, we share the same ideals. What we really need to do now is get a lot more companies and a lot more people to really take CSR to heart because only when you internalize CSR that you really see that this is not an expense rather this is an investment for the future," Shell companies in the Philippines chairman Ed Chua explained.

LCF presented the program for the CSR Expo, which will focus on involving CEOs, middle management and rank and file employees and youth in sharing the Filipino CSR experience.

The LCF CSR Expo 2006 is open to the public. Those who want to go to the event may use public utility jeeps and buses that ply the Market! Market! Ayala and Guadalupe-Market! Market! routes. For more information visit www.lcf.org.ph or call 892-9189/892-9084/892-5753.

Leadership lessons from Lewis and Clark-II

HALFORD LUCCOCK RECALLED A BIOGRAPHY of Alexander the Great in which the writer described the panic felt by the Greek army when Alexander died.

They had followed Alexander across Asia Minor and stood facing the Himalayan Mountains that form a natural barrier separating northern India from the plateau of Tibet in China.

"And there they discovered that they had marched clear off the map. Their only maps were Greek maps. These maps showed only a part of Asia Minor. The rest of the map was a blank space."

The Greek army was not the first group to find itself in uncharted lands, nor was it by any means the last. Amidst globalization, a volatile job market, shifting economic realities, and technological innovations, the leaders of today frequently find themselves marching through unexplored and unmapped terrain. In these moments, no one has marked the road, no precedents have been set, and it falls upon the leader to blaze a new trail. How can a person prepare to lead effectively in such an uncertain environment?

Last week, we looked at the leadership of two great American explorers who dared to march off of the map of their familiar world: Meriwether Lewis and William Clark. The improbable success of their Corps of Discovery was due to more than their on-the-spot genius.

Preparation preceded their expedition and paved their way to greatness. In this column, we'll examine Lewis' preparation under the tutelage of President Thomas Jefferson to find tried and true principles to aid our leadership journeys.

Preparation should begin with the dream, not with the reality.

Jefferson began to groom Lewis to lead the momentous expedition across America long before the Louisiana Purchase was even a possibility, and before Congress ap-

'Hot' issues around National Artist Award

By Amadis Ma. Guerrero
Contributor

WHAT IS THE SIGNIFICANCE, if any, of the National Artist Award to the youth? Are the students aware of who the National Artists this year are? Is the hand of politics always present here? Why are regional writers dropped from the final deliberations?

These were among the "hot" issues swirling around the latest "Sining Tak-takan," a monthly forum of the Cultural Center of the Philippines. Present were National Artist for Literature Bienvenido Lumbera and National Artist for Film Eddie Romero. Nanding Josef and Lilian Barco of the CCP served as panelists, with Ed Cabagnot of the CCP Films Division moderating.

Addressing the students (mostly from Philippine Normal University), Josef asked if the National Artist Award was relevant to them.

One student admitted that "it was not inculcated to us why this award is important and who these National Artists are." Another student said that "we have been overwhelmed by the new technology. Now we have an idea of our responsibilities [as future teachers] to inculcate the importance of this award."

Was the hand of politics present in the Award to action star Fernando Poe Jr. and to the Tausog sculptor Abdul Mari Imao?

Also speaking in Filipino, Lumbera observed that you could not separate politics and the fact that Poe was a presidential candidate from his movie career and his person/humanity ("pagkatao").

Romero, on the other hand, said "siempre may politics," but in the case of Poe, "it was the PAF (Film Academy of the Philippines) which initiated the move, no matter how Malacañang felt... it couldn't be stopped anyway. So there's no political consideration in that."

After a long process, the joint boards of the CCP and the National Commission for Culture and the Arts (NCCA) selected six names (out of 101 nominees) and sent these to Malacañang this year. The Palace approved the six, and added a seventh artist—Imao.

"Imao did not lobby for the award and he is deserving," declared Josef. There was no quarrel with that, as the accomplishments of the Muslim sculptor spoke for themselves.

Lumbera called attention to another issue: Those who write in their own regional language—he cited the case of outstanding Ilongga poet Magdalena Jalandoni—often do not make it to the final deliberations, because the people in the committee don't know their works ("dahil hindi kilala ng mga tao sa committee").

Until this is rectified, the National Artist for Literature said, the nomination process will not be truly national, as the finalists are often those who write in English or Tagalog.

As for the critics outside Manila, Lumbera added, they usually write in English and they use Manila standards ("pamanatayan Manila"), "which is mostly Western norm, the culture of Hemingway and Faulkner. They do not know the culture of the Philippines."

Art, Lumbera stressed, is not an activity for one's self. It is something that should be shared with your

Bacolod as music country

By Pablo A. Tariman
Contributor

ONE FRIDAY NIGHT LAST month, I found myself in Bacolod listening to the post-concert open forum of the 12th "Romantic Piano Concerto Journey" of pianists Ingrid Sala Santamaria and Reynaldo Reyes.

The forum was held in an intimate hall of Sacred Heart Seminary. After excerpts from the Rachmaninoff, Brahms and Beethoven concertos, the audience—consisting mostly of young seminarians and music lovers from Bacolod—had a full serving of the Schumann A Minor concerto.

The concert opened with Mallotte's "Our Father," sang with inner fervor (and a capella) by Charles Kevin Tan.

The post-concert reactions varied. One said the music brought him to another world, another said the music allowed him to look into himself with detachment.

Seminary rector Fr. Jerry Alminasa said music was another way of making us feel about God's presence. Msgr. Guillermo Gaston (cousin of the first and last Filipino mezzo of consequence, Conchita Gaston) agreed that music should be part of everyone's growth.

After the concert, there was sudden interest in piano playing and Reyes gave everyone hope by saying a great pianist actually managed his first recital at age 55!

On that same day in between rehearsals and performance, I visited EFisher Hotel where in the '90s I mounted concerts for Cecile Licad, Antonio Meneses, Andrew Fernando, Makie Misawa, Gary del Rosario, Joseph Esmilla.

The hotel brought back many musical memories. I must say Bacolod is a city that loves music.

I got the urge to visit Bacolod for the first time when I saw the Peque Gallaga film "Oro, Plata, Mata," which featured operatic arias in its crucial scenes.

And so I joined a Manila Symphony tour of Bacolod under conductor Gilopez Kabayao listening the Liszt concerto with Corazon Kabayao as a feisty soloist in the mid-'80s. While there, I checked possible concert venues.

I always like staying in the pension house of Carmen Kilayko, whose late doctor-husband was a cellist. When Ms Kilayko heard Brazilian cellist Antonio Meneses for the first time in Bacolod, she profusely thanked me not just for the music but for the cello which allowed her to recall happy musical days with her late husband.

I wondered why I felt so close to this Kilayko garden house. At one moment Ms Kilayko caught me staring in another room of the house, she pointed out: "That room was where soprano Helen Traubel stayed when she performed in Bacolod in the early '50s."

Traubel happened to be one of the greatest Wagnerian sopranos to appear in the American opera scene.

When I heard a 1949 Voice of America recording of mezzo soprano Conchita Gaston in Silay City many years back, I fell in love with the voice. No wonder Leonard Bernstein easily liked her.

I met and heard La Gaston briefly in 1980 when she was introduced to me and the Rumanian diva Nelly Miricioiu by the late music-loving lawyer, Honorario Poblador.

When I dropped by briefly at the Bacolod Cathedral, I recalled a dying Conchita Gaston trying to finish Gounod's "Ave Maria" with the remaining vocal strength she had but in vain. She collapsed, and a few months later, she passed away in the arms of her husband on the veranda of her Netherlands villa. It was death reminiscent of "La Traviata."

I brought baritone Andrew Fernando to the Gaston Museum in the late '90s. This was before his stint with LA Opera and the Hong Kong Academy of Performing Arts.

Santamaria and Reyes also capped their concerto journey in Negros in that historic Silay Museum last week. What was heartening was the presence of youthful offenders in the audience. Indeed, Msgr. Gaston was determined to bring music not just to the well-off but also to the socially marginalized.

My musical journey to Bacolod resumes on July 24, when two-time Namcya winner Oliver Salonga interprets Beethoven, Prokofiev and Chopin at the La Proa Ballroom of EFisher Hotel.

Salonga's first solo recital at the Philam-life last week was cheered by critics and music lovers alike. "A really amazing pianist!" said Sis. Maria Anunciata Sta. Ana, head of the College of Music and Performing Arts.

"There is no doubt this young Salonga will go very far as a pianist," said PT. Martin, father of filmmaker Raya Martin.

Young Filipino cellist Victor Michael Coo is always in demand in music festivals abroad. He just came back from the Sarasota Music Festival. Next week, he returns to Fontainebleau in France for another festival engagement. He might come back to Manila in December for a solo recital.

Tenor Otoniel Gonzaga will have a concert with the Manila Philharmonic Orchestra on Saturday, Dec. 9, at the Philam-life Theater. It is called "Christmas Spectacular with Otoniel Gonzaga." He will team up for the first time with conductor Rodol Colmenar.

'Death and the Maiden' to be staged amid political killings

ACTOR'S ACTORS INC. (AAI) STAGES ARIEL Dorfman's "Death and the Maiden" with Bart Guingona, Michael Williams and Bituin Escalante on Aug. 4-6, at the Carlos P. Romulo Auditorium, RCBC Plaza.

Dorfman's "Death and the Maiden" is a thriller about Paulina Escobar, who believes the stranger who comes to her home is the doctor who, under a military dictatorship, tortured and raped her many years before. Paulina loved the musical piece by Franz Schubert titled "Death and the Maiden," but grew to revile it when it was played repeatedly during her torture sessions with the doctor.

Dorfman began writing the play in the mid-1980s, when he was in exile from Chile, a country under the rule of the military dictator Gen. Augusto Pinochet. It was not until Chile's return to democracy in 1990 that Dorfman returned to the play and "understood... how the story had to be told."

The play has special relevance in the Philippines, which, like Chile, has suffered under a similarly repressive regime. The play assumes new relevance today given that human rights are once more a hot-button issue after the February emergency powers, and the legacy of the martial law years being revisited due to the plan of the Presidential Commission on Good Government to strike compromise deals with the Marcos family over the latter's alleged ill-gotten wealth.

"Death and the Maiden," originally in Spanish, has been translated into numerous languages and performed around the world.

In light of the recent spate of prisoners' suicides at the Guantanamo Bay facility, the play seems not to have lost any of its power and relevance today.

The play, on its own, is a gripping, universal examination of the psychological repercussions of human-rights abuses. It derives its power from its taut, well-paced structure, and sharply drawn characters.

The idea for mounting "Death and the

BART Guingona, Bituin Escalante and Michael Williams in Ariel Dorfman's "Death and the Maiden"

Maiden" was first brought up by Bituin Escalante. Feeling the need to stretch herself as an artist, she first approached director Bart Guingona, asking him to recommend a challenging role that she might study.

Guingona, known for his intense and intelligent productions, pointed out that studying a role was incomplete without it being performed before an audience. He then slyly tossed her the Ariel Dorfman script, recruited Michael Williams into the project, and squeezed one weekend's performance into their collective schedules.

Escalante is making her nonmusical theatrical debut in "Death and the Maiden." She takes on the role originally played by Glenn Close on Broadway, which won Close the Tony Award for Best Actress, and was essayed by Sigourney Weaver in the Roman Polanski-directed film version.

The character of Paulina is intense, driven and intelligent. The play revolves around Paulina's revenge upon those who had abused her. It is the kind of dream role that actresses would love to sink their chops into, and Escalante is no exception.

She has plunged into rehearsals like fish into water, fully lending her native intelligence and innate confidence to the role. Having spent many years in the theater before moving over to television where she has earned stardom, she has made it a point to keep coming back to the theater to hone her craft, recognizing it as the true actor's medium.

Guingona, apart from directing the production, also plays Paulina's husband Gerardo (originally played by Richard Dreyfuss on Broadway) while Williams takes on the pivotal role of Roberto (originally played by Gene Hackman on Broadway, Ben Kingsley in the movie).

AAI's "Death and the Maiden" will be staged for only one weekend at the Carlos P. Romulo Auditorium, RCBC Plaza, Ayala cor. Gil Puyat Avenues, Makati. Performance dates are Aug. 4-5, 8 p.m., and Aug. 5-6, 3 p.m.

Tickets are available at Ticketworld, call 8919999 or text 0917-5289746.

UST Philets cites 'Gulong ng Palad' writer, other outstanding alumni

FIVE OUTSTANDING GRADUATES of the Faculty of Philosophy and Letters (now Faculty of Arts and Letters) of the University of Sto. Tomas will be honored at its annual reunion on July 8 at the Quezon City Sports Club.

The five awardees will receive Golden Owl medals from former information minister and press secretary Greg Cendaña and Evelyn Sebastian-Pelplew, chair and secretary of the Philets Foundation Inc.

The Philets Foundation Inc. presents the Golden Owl Award to alumni who excelled in their respective fields of expertise.

This year's awardees are Nita Umali Berthelsen, Loida Flores Virina, Pacita S. Almario, Rey M. Datu and Crispin C. Maslog.

Berthelsen of Class '46 will receive the Golden Owl Award for print journalism in recognition of her perceptive columns and essays in the weekly magazines of the Manila Chronicle, Philippines Herald, Manila Times and Taliba, and publications in Denmark, her second home.

Virina, Class '53, is recognized as a broadcast communicator for her consistent work in writing scripts for outstanding radio and television programs, such as "Gulong ng Palad," "Home Along da Riles" and "Home Along da Airport," and "Flor de Luna."

Almario, Class '54, is awarded for her dedicated service to overseas Filipino workers through the Good Shepherd apostolate and to disadvantaged parents through her leadership of the Solo Parents program of the Christian Family Movement.

Datu, Class '65, is recognized for investment banking and his support for humanitarian causes.

Maslog of Classes '55 and '60 is awardee for education. A postgraduate degree holder from University of North Dakota, he has been visiting professor at several American and Asian universities.

He was training consultant of the Philippine Press Institute, dean of the Asian Institute of Journalism and Communication, founding director of Silliman University's School of Communication, and professor at the University of the Philippines Los Baños.

Maslog has written 20 books on communication and is currently working on another book. He is considered the father of development communication in the Philippines.

Pelplew chaired the screening committee for the Golden Owl Award, with Ma. Luisa Zumel-Lopez, Roger Buhay, Arturo Dimayuga, Milagros Araneta, Vicente del Fierro Jr. and Alice Coler-Villadolid as members.

SANTOS in the 1970s, as principal dancer of the San Francisco Ballet

Tina Santos, a gem of Philippine ballet, comes home

By Clarissa Mijares
Contributor

IN 1968, THERE WAS A Renaissance in classical ballet in the Philippines, after a 10-year ban that almost caused the demise of this beautiful art. And in the midst of this reawakening was an 18-year-old emerging ballerina, the tall and lithe Tina Santos.

She was the gem of the newly formed Dance Theater Philippines, founded by the triumvirate of Julie Borromeo, Tita Radaic and Eddie Elejar.

Danish ballet master Poul Gnat guided the company for its first program at the Meralco Theater (that was before the CCP had been built by Imelda Marcos). He followed the format and program which he also used in establishing the Royal New Zealand Ballet a decade before, including lecture demonstrations in schools, aside from theater performances in Metro Manila and the provinces.

After Gnat's guest stint in Dance Theater Philippines, the three young founders, Julie, Tita and Eddie, conceived of an entirely Philippine ballet program. And it was inevitable that Tina Santos would play a central role as its youngest and most vibrant ballerina.

She was cast as soloist in Borromeo's "Zagalas de Manila" and "Kalingan"; in Radaic's comedy ballet "Tanan," where she was in her element as an actress-dancer. She also danced a lead role in Elejar's "Indarapatra," an exotic ballet based on a Muslim myth.

In one of their sorties in Mindanao, in the Muslim village Talungasakay, Zamboanga, Tina Santos gave an impromptu performance in the plaza after the company watched the local Muslim dance teacher teach his regular afternoon class for children and teenagers. Tina started with a little balletic dance, then went on to do a little jazz and ended up with "a-go-go" that sent the village audience into excited applause.

That is Tina Santos—actress, dancer, comedienne, all rolled into a zest for life. Aside from being a ballerina, she also appeared on television, on the ramp, on magazine covers and in musical theater productions.

She is married to former dance partner Gary Wahl and has a daughter, Nikka, who is a scholar at the Florida State University's Music Theater Program. Tina resides in Miami, Florida, where she is a celebrated dance teacher.

Tina began her professional career in dance here in the Philippines. She trained under the watchful eyes of Joji Felix, Israel Gabriel, Radaic and Gnat, and, in 1968, became a founding member of Dance Theater Philippines.

Tina joined the Harkness Ballet of New York in 1970 as a member of the corps and was promoted to soloist six months later. She extensively toured Europe and the USA with the company and this bolstered her status in the Harkness Ballet.

She and her husband joined the San Francisco Ballet as principal dancers in 1973. Tina was well-known for her versatility on stage. Critics commended her for her acting skills and her virtuosic dance technique. She could shift effortlessly from comic to dramatic roles and was technically competent in classical ballet, Balanchine ballets, jazz and modern-contemporary.

Top US dance educator

Tina was elected as one of the 10 Outstanding Young Women of California in 1978, and awarded a Medal of Distinction in Dance by the Manila Commission on Arts and Culture the following year.

In the '80s, Tina taught students and professional dancers in major schools in the San Francisco Bay Area before she became a Resident Faculty of the Harid Conservatory in Boca Raton, South Florida. Marcelo Gomez, now a principal dancer of American Ballet

She is a full-time faculty member of the New World School of the Arts in Miami.

Having studied with ballet masters of varying systems such as Gnat (Danish); David Howard, Ben Stevenson, Terry Westmoreland and Kathleen Crofton (British); Perry Brunson (Czech); Richard Gibson, Tatiana Grantzeva, Alexander Minz (Russian); and Lew Christensen (Balanchine), Tina has developed her own style of teaching that emphasizes purity of movement and unmanipulated technique. A Dance Magazine critic described her classes as "energetic, musical, positive, tough and precise."

She has won five Teacher Recognition Certificates sponsored by the National Foundation for the Advancement of the Arts (1996-1999 and 2003-2004). She has served in the Florida State Division of Cultural Affairs on its Dance Organizations Panel and was an On-site Evaluator for Miami City Ballet. Tina Santos is an honoree in the Who's Who among America's Teachers in 2004.

Rare Manila visit

Tina Santos was in Manila for several weeks in June, conducting master classes organized by the National Ballet Syllabus Inc., with the help of NBS teacher/examiner Violeta Velasco. The classes were held in Manila's top ballet schools: the Radaic School of Classical Ballet in STC, Quezon City; Sofia Elizalde's Steps Dance Studio in Makati; and at the Halili-Cruz School of Dance along Quezon Avenue, Quezon City.

The classes were packed with dancers from several dance schools including scholars of the CCP School of Dance, students of Toni Lopez-Gonzales (Makati), Chelo Borromeo-Gemina and the Claravall School of Ballet (Parañaque).

The young ballet dancers enjoyed Santos' style of teaching. She was witty and humorous when giving corrections and instructions. She was very particular with the dancers' use of music. She gave exercises with simple steps and tricky musical accents to develop the dancers' musicality.

Santos was also emphatic that the students not only execute the combinations but also to really "dance" them. She stressed that the class should already be a performance.

Aside from ballet technique, Tina Santos shared with the young dancers her love and passion for dance. She goes home to the US with these dancers looking up to her now as a role model. Wherever she goes she announces that she is proud to be Filipino.

Tina Santos has been invited to be an international examiner for the Philippine National Ballet Syllabus authored by Radaic, Noordin Jumalon and Vella Damian.

Mr. & Ms-July provides health tips

ARE YOU HEALTHY?

That is the question that Mr. & Ms poses in its special issue on health this July.

The July issue emphasizes the relationship of body, mind and spirit to fully realize true fitness.

Do you have a peaceful mind? Are you enjoying the benefits of a fit body? Are you reaping the advantages of a clean spirit? Mr. & Ms, as the Super-monthly of the Body, Mind and Spirit, helps you answer all those questions.

Here are some tips to achieve a fit and relaxed body:

Try walking! Everyone benefits from fitness walking. It is great for everyone, even for those already fit. Walking is one of the safest ways to condition your body, lose excess pounds, reduce stress and boost energy. You may even meet new friends! Read more about the advantages of this underrated aerobic exercise in the July issue.

Heed the benefits of Tai Chi. Tai Chi has both physical and psychological health benefits. For over 1,000 years, Tai Chi has been the secret of some Chinese families for having a long life. So in order to achieve the same, start doing the martial art, Tai Chi.

Find relaxation in the form of water. A wonderful spa in the metropolis features hydrotherapy treatments such as pool and jet showers that soothe those tired muscles. Did you know that water has special powers in rejuvenation by calming the lungs, heart, stomach and endocrine system by stimulating nerve reflexes on the spinal cord? Water therapy is all one needs to achieve relaxation.

Be healed using alternative medicine. A good doctor promotes the advantages of healing in a not-so-usual way. Using homeopathic medicines and alternative therapies, patients of the clinic are encouraged by the relief and hope they receive.

Seek the magic of thyme. The spicy herb offers a variety of benefits. Thyme is effective for colic, flatulence, sore throats, colds and it serves as a digestive aid. Mr. & Ms offers more information on thyme, plus recipes.

Watch your thoughts and prevent illnesses. "Since we cause our own illnesses, we can also heal ourselves... by changing the mental patterns that created our illness," says Louise Hay, author of Heal Your Body. A positive thought invites good physical vibes. Mr. & Ms invites you to start the optimism and discard the negativity.

Top celebrities Kris Aquino and Boy Abunda encourage everyone to start moving and start drinking... lots of water, that is. The two share some tips on how they have lost their unwanted pounds. Aside from the two, buffed and beautiful men—Piolo Pascual, Polo Ravales and cager Danny Ildelfonso—reveal the secret to their healthy glow.

"BOUQUET for You"

By Jessica Jalandoni-Robillos
Contributor

CANVASES BURSTING WITH BLOOMS whose petals are rendered by thick impasto strokes, their paint throbbing, possibly the visual metaphor for a myriad floral essences wafting invitingly, at once calming and invigorating.

Such is the impression a viewer may get from the works of Fatima Antonio that are featured in "Floral Offerings," which opens on July 5, 6 p.m. at Gallery Nine (tel. 6877302) in SM Megamall.

Fatima Antonio Baquiran has the art gene in her, being the daughter of distinguished artists Angelito Antonio and Norma Belleza.

Like her parents, Fatima studied at the former College of Architecture and Fine Arts (now College of Fine Arts and Design) of University of Santo Tomas, earning a degree in Interior Design in 1992. She began painting soon after college, almost immediately after giving birth to her first child. It could be said her art is the twin of her firstborn, and she has nurtured both since.

Quiet and unassuming like her mother, Fatima is flattered when critics and viewers note the similarity of her works to mom's. "Symple, Norma Belleza 'yan," (Of course! That's Norma Belleza!), she said. She admires her mom's works, particularly their composition.

"PERFORMERS: Two Jugglers and a Musician"

Luz's 1995-2005 works on exhibit

A MAJOR EXHIBIT OF WORKS by National Artist Arturo Luz opens at 7 p.m., July 12, at The Centre Gallery of Galerie Joaquin Main.

Thirty-six paintings done by Luz from 1995-2005 will be on exhibit. Titled "Temples, Performers and Cities of the Past," the show mainly features paintings on these three themes.

Luz started working on his "Temples" series after he went in 1988 on an extended trip to the Indian subcontinent, where he was impressed by its physical beauty. There he saw literally hundreds of Buddhist and Hindu temples.

What he found quite attractive were the architectural forms of stupas which, like their counterparts, the pagoda, are spiritual monuments designed to symbolize the enlightened mind and the path to its realization.

"Cities of the Past" came from his visits to sites of ancient civilizations in Asia such as Angkor Wat in Cambodia, Borobudur, the ancient capital of the Majapahit empire in Indonesia, and Sukhothai, the ancient Thai capital in the 12th-14th century.

Located near Yom River, sukhothai literally means The Dawn of Happiness.

Built in the 12th century, Angkor Wat was the epitome of the high classical style of Khmer architecture. It was first a Hindu then a Buddhist religious center. Borobudur, in the Indonesian province of Central Java, is a Buddhist stupa related to the Mahayana tradition and is the largest Buddhist monument on earth.

The exhibit is in anticipation of the 80th birthday of Luz on Nov. 30. Luz was granted the National Artist award in the Philippines in 1997.

Noted for his linear, geometric abstractions, Luz was born in 1926 in Manila. He went to the University of Santo Tomas

School of Fine Arts, then received scholarship at the California College of Arts and Craft in Oakland for a three-year diploma in art program. He continued his education at the Brooklyn Museum Art School in New York in 1950 and at the Academie de la Grande Chaumiere in Paris in 1951.

Luz is recognized worldwide, having mounted several exhibitions abroad. He is three-time First Prize winner at the Art Association of the Philippines Annual Competition.

He also received scholarship grants from Spain in 1953, Italy in 1963, and the United States in 1963. He is also the recipient of the Republic Cultural Heritage Award for Painting in 1966; the Patnubay ng Kalinangan Award for Painting from the City of Manila in 1981; and the Cultural Center of the Philippines' Gawad for the Visual Arts in 1989.

He was awarded the Order of Chevalier des Arts et Lettres by the French government in 1978.

Portrait of desire

By Constantino C. Tejero

JUST MENTION THE WORD SEX and there is sure to be a rush to see what's going on.

The gallery-goer, however, was somewhat unprepared for what Jerson Samson and Elmer Roslin had to show in their joint exhibit "Biglang-Likô," 10 pieces in oil on canvas, recently in The Crucible Gallery at the Artwalk, L/4, Bldg. A, SM Megamall, Mandaluyong City.

Both products of the University of the Philippines College of Fine Arts, with Samson majoring in Painting and Roslin in Visual Communications, these young artists are realists with expressionist tendencies. In this exhibit, they have demonstrated they're up to the world of total reality.

In a series of five pieces each, Samson and Roslin have artfully situated the sexual act in cramped rooms of cheap motels, in a world of dark trysts, guilty secrets and one-night stands, so that what's supposed to be an expression of intimacy and affection becomes ugly, almost repugnant.

We don't know whether these are married couples, magasyota, DOMs and their kabit, or popok and their parokyo. We just sense that, the way it is depicted by Samson and Roslin, what they're doing is not right or proper.

Act of voyeurism

Far from tampering with the sexual act with postures and poses as what illustrators of romance novels and hardcore porn are wont to do, the two artists depict it as what it really is and succeed in making it look banal—so that the viewer stands dumbfounded between fascination and repulsion.

Although no genitalia is shown, not even a strand of pubic hair, and with only a peek of breast or nipple as a sign of erogenous zone, the gallery-goer somewhat cringes from guilt or shame. Because the artists have forced the viewer to play the voyeur.

Their eyes spare nothing. Their probing is such that what is private becomes public. And sometimes the subjects themselves play accomplices to the act of voyeurism.

In Samson's "Souvenir," rendered in cold metallic gray, the copulating couple reflected on the ceiling mirror take a cell phone video of their sexual acrobatics.

In Roslin's "Sidhi," in flame-red and burnt orange, the frontal groping and mashing is so in-your-face the viewer is sure to take a breath and reflexively look away.

Woman as goddess and as abstraction

By Gino Dormiendo
Contributor

TWO CONTEMPORARY FILIPINO artists working along contrasting genres have, by coincidence, chosen an identical theme for their solo shows, both also opening the first week of July.

Jun Martinez, born in a town near Bacolod, but has since lived in the Big City, pays homage to the goddesses that inhabit our local myths and legends.

Enrique Tabuena, an art director in a leading advertising agency in the Middle East, depicts the iconic woman in her manifold moods and charms.

An impressionist best known for his endearing work in watercolor, Martinez provides the two-volume tome "Myths and Legends of the Philippines" its essential character through his artworks. Most of his pieces are in oil on canvas, and a few are in watercolor, both with hardly any distinction in treatment, save perhaps for the size. He is ambidextrous in either medium.

Extracting the image out of a well-known tale has its pitfalls, such as having to be unabashedly literal in illustration.

But Martinez, given his sense of delicacy and control, knows how to provide the quintessential spirit to the narrative. From the image of the waiting lovelorn princess in "The Goddess of Bai Palimu" to that of "Rajah Solaiman and Princess Puti," the artist wields firm control of his medium in driving home a number of key lessons.

Martinez has done similar stuff for several publications, but this particular book (published by Marlene Aguilar) has touches of local color, not to mention the artist's predilection for kayumang tones, an added asset to his figurative work.

There is also his impressively dynamic brushwork, which was present in his previous illustrations of farm animals, such as the calendar published by Merial Philippines. It is a style that blends mellifluously with the narrative, shunning gimmickry or sensationalism.

This show of Martinez' works, which, by the way, coincides with the formal launching of the book, will be at the Artes Figuras Gallery on the ground floor of Piazza Soliven in Bacolod City.

"THE GODDESS of Palinku," by Jun Martinez

The collection will have its final exhibit at Noviria Art Gallery, Unit 2, 0296 Don Gil Garcia St., Capitol Site, Cebu City.

In Manila, the show at Metro Gallery, at 55 P. Guevarra, beside Café Ysabel, coincides with the re-launching of "Myths and Legends of the Philippines."

Enrique Tabuena's "Woman Is in the Details" (Astra Gallery, 210 N. Garcia St., Bel-Air Village, Makati) consists of 35 oil paintings in the artist's quasi-abstract style.

The show focuses on the richly varied interpretation of women caught in varied moods and evolving personas.

Born in Sorsogon, Tabuena has developed a palette both rich and untrammelled in its approach. He attended the University of Santo Tomas, majoring in Advertising Arts, and graduated in 1988.

The influence of National Artist HR Ocampo on Tabuena is evident in the biomorphic forms and arcane hidden images that dominate his canvases.

Tabuena has an exuberant color sense. Exploring every known facet of the prism, he experiments with coloration and its relation to moods and emotions.

In what concededly is his best composition in the show, "Scent," Tabuena cleverly plays with the figure, cutting it up like random pieces of a jigsaw puzzle.

The way he conceals and exposes bits and pieces of the composition may recall Kandinsky and Chagall, though he admits being most fascinated by the works of M. C. Escher, who upholds the supremacy of color for its own sake.

But the many other pieces in a show that celebrates 15 years of Tabuena's art engagement are no less exuberant, with their multi-image delineation and fine color aesthetics.

ON VIEW until July 15 at Avellana Art Gallery is Tosha Albor's "Why I Am Not a Painter." Titled after a Frank O'Hara poem, the exhibit explores the tentative journey of the artist into the indeterminate realm of abstracted line and color and how she, oscillating between the certainty of thought and gut-feel, comes up with an array of forms—airplanes, faces, layered presences—that dutifully marry experience with reflection. Avellana Art Gallery is at A-19, 2680 F.B. Harrison St., Pasay City (fronting Glendon Academy). Call 8338357.

"JUGJUGAN Na," by Jerson Samson

"TAMPUHAN," by Roslin

ples are depicted in various sexual positions it borders on the lewd. Only the lighting, perspective and formal composition redeem it from the pornographic.

Home or brothel

In Roslin's "Init," at least, the man and woman remember to turn their backs to the audience while doing their thing. And in Samson's "Jugjugan Na," similar in imagery and composition to "Short Time," the scene is distanced so that the writhing figures are barely recognizable.

Some of these are sly portraits. Roslin's "Tirahan," partially showing a bedroom, foyer and toilet, is punning on the title to mean either a home or a place for fornication.

In his "Nasa Ibang Ulap," the couple's ostensibly passionate kiss and embrace take on a different meaning when the viewer notices that, while the man's eyes are blissfully closed, the woman's are wide open, probably seeing another lover.

Samson's "Virgin" shows nothing but beds in violet light in multiple mirror reflections. One looks closer and sees bloodstains on the white sheet of one bed.

In his "Ihi Lang ang Pahinga," a man takes a respite from sex by, well, taking a leak in the toilet.

Sweat and afterglow

There is poignancy in Roslin's depiction of a couple after sex in "Tampuhan." With backs turned to each other, he is holding a bottle of beer while she is texting on her cell phone. One can't be sure whether they're sulking, just exhausted, or plain bored. The afterglow can be found only in the lambent orange light on the wall.

Both artists demonstrate a strong narrative bent. Roslin employs conventional composition, proscenium-type framing and warm harmony, while Samson uses complex perspective, unusual angles and mostly cool colors.

In each piece, both have shown themselves to be accomplished colorists, in the harsh neon washes, flame-colored highlights, earth tones, chiefly in monochromes. Samson's colorism is the more incandescent of the two, while Roslin's can be radiant but is softer.

It is such expressive use of color that ruthlessly exposes this world of sweaty sexuality and hard-breathing desire.

The artists may seem cruel for stripping sex of its mystique, but they can't help it. It's just an everyday activity, after all.

Art auction for women's health programs

SCHERING PHILIPPINE CORP. AND THE Philippine Obstetrics and Gynecology Society (POGS) are holding the art exhibit-auction "Woman in All Her Glory," featuring 30 paintings by Nemi Miranda and nine other Angono artists.

The paintings will be auctioned off during the jubilee anniversary celebration of POGS on July 6 at the Hotel Philippine Plaza (formerly Westin Philippine Plaza).

The artworks will be open to public viewing 8 a.m.-4 p.m. at the foyer of the grand ballroom. A live auction follows 4-6 p.m. Proceeds will fund the various women's projects of POGS.

"I see beauty in an older woman," said Nemi Miranda. "Beauty, or sexiness, is not in the features or body contours. It's not superficial, it's something deeper."

Other artists in the exhibit are Atoy Apostadero, Jovito Andres, Keiye Tuazon, Paulo Miranda, Abe Lucas, Entes Magpusao, Bing Siochi, Paul Dimalanta and Ernie Patricio.

Amoncio and Espiritu go 'One on One'

FELIX AMONCIO AND JUN ESPIRITU ARE holding a joint exhibit, "One on One," which marks the anniversary of Galeria Fernando at the lower level of Casa Susana, Casa Vicente Bldg., Madrigal Avenue (beside Alabang Town Center).

Both artists depict similar scenes and themes, but Espiritu's works are characterized by light and bright hues and arched lines that result in faces with pointed foreheads. They contrast with, yet complement, Amoncio's works featuring women with prominent chins and painted in earthy colors.

The show is extended until July 8. Call 8506963 or 0928-2188516.

ART showcase is along the perimeter walls

THE WORKS use industrial paint in a kaleidoscope of modulated colors.

Eye-catching spectacle in center of commerce

GEOMETRIC shapes characteristic of Vinluan's work evoke the geometries of nature.

A LONG THE FRINGES OF THE SOON-to-rise Greenbelt 5, bordered by Legaspi Street and the inner courtyards and covered walkways of Greenbelt 1, visual art has become an eye-catching everyday spectacle.

Once the marked domain of museums and galleries, high art has gone public; expanding its illuminating grasp to the realm of random pedestrians, and introducing a cheerful mélange of colors to their mundane routes.

The man behind this onslaught of accessible "street art" is Nestor Vinluan, a pioneer of Philippine abstraction and former dean of the UP College of Fine Arts. Five months ago, Ayala Mall's Greenbelt team commissioned the 57-year-old artist to paint the board panels wrapping around the construction site of Greenbelt 5.

GB5, slated to open in the third quarter of 2007, is the culminating piece of the grand lifestyle project that is Greenbelt.

"Greenbelt 5 will house the best the country has to offer alongside international luxury brands," says Rowena Tomeldan, Ayala Land vice president and Ayala Malls deputy head. "It will truly make Greenbelt 5 at par with the best of the world."

The new wing will house various restaurants offering international cuisine, leading global fashion and luxury brands, art galleries showcasing top local artists, and fashion houses owned by world-class Filipino designers.

Given its close proximity to the Ayala Museum, one of the main thrusts of GB5 is to espouse Filipino artistry and ingenuity. Thus, soliciting the creative services of a celebrated Filipino artist such as Vinluan was the first step in realizing this vision; a proud patriotic gesture, as well as a salute to local talent that has gone global.

Arresting works

Using industrial paint in a kaleidoscope of modulated colors, creatively contoured canvases in geometric and biomorphic forms, and a sublime use of free space and slender wood beams, Vinluan has created a tapestry of arresting wall works that are thrust imposingly at casual bystanders.

Talk on Kapampangan culture at Lopez Museum

THE LOPEZ MEMORIAL MUSEUM, IN cooperation with the Museum Foundation of the Philippines, presents the sixth lecture in the series "Stories about Preserving Cultural Heritage," on July 8, 2-4 p.m., at the Lopez Library. The talk, "Pamibyebye, gawig, lub: Re-discovering Kapampangan culture," will discuss the distinct Kapampangan culture—food, language—and efforts to preserve it. Lord Francis Musni of the Center for Kapampangan Studies is lecturer. Musni, who has attended courses on museum and cultural heritage management at the University of Santo Tomas' Cultural Heritage Studies program, is the archivist and consultant on church history and heritage of the Juan D. Nepomuceno Center for Kapampangan Studies. The Center was established by the Holy Angels University in 2002 to preserve, study and promote local history and culture. Its museum, library, research and publication unit, archives and theater have produced magazines, award-winning books, concerts and exhibitions to create more interest in Kapampangan culture. Fee is P50 for Museum Foundation members and P100 for non-members. The Lopez Memorial Museum is at the Benpres Building, Exchange Road and Meralco Avenue, Pasig City. "UNTITLED," by Ronald Ananding

Ananding, Buencamino at Mag:net

RONALD Ananding's "Blind Spot," July 6-31 at Mag:net Gallery Paseo, is a series of oil-on-canvas paintings which source their imagery from patterns created by magnified dust particles. The exhibit will also include the artist's "Dust Folio" series, a virtual portfolio or collection of particles which have accumulated over a year of stay in his studio using clear-book fillers. Ananding will also present an installation piece consisting of an exhaust fan wrapped entirely in canvas. Curated by Roberto Chabel. Call 8177895 or e-mail magnetplus@gmail.com or visit magnetnet.com.ph. Lyle Buencamino's first solo exhibit, "A Bowtie for John Lyle," opens on July 4, 6:30 p.m., at Mag:net Gallery ABS, The Loop, ELJ Center, ABS-CBN compound, Mother Ignacia Ave. and Eugenio Lopez St., QC. The title is taken from a lost music piece which Buencamino's father had used for the end-credits of a film. The exhibit will run until July 31. Twigg at UP Vargas

UP Jorge B. Vargas Museum and Filipiniana Research Center and artist-in-residence Tony Twigg opens "Voyage to the Philippines: Ian Fairweather's Examination of a Crowd, 1934-38" on July 4 at the Lobby Gallery. The exhibit will feature canvas reproductions of works of British-Australian artist Ian Fairweather (1891-1972), regarded as Australia's finest abstract expressionist painter, who worked in the Philippines between 1934 to 1938. Fairweather's critics have declared his works made during this period as masterpieces and a fusion of European Modernism and Asian art, particularly Chinese calligraphy. It was also during this time that Modernism entered the Philippine art scene. Twigg will discuss his research on July 11, 1 p.m. The show runs until Aug. 13. Farley del Rosario at Blanc

TOP young artist Farley del Rosario's new works are on exhibit in "At Play," at Blanc Art Space, 2E Crown Tower, 107 Dela Costa St., Salcedo Village, Makati City. Featured in Del Rosario's signature scenes of delightful frolic and whimsical leisure are the artist's lovable string-necked urchins with curled arms. The show runs until July 12. Call 7520032 or 0920-9276436.

The scintillating abstract works have not gone unnoticed.

"While I was busy painting the boards, so many people stopped to tell me how much they appreciate the art in the street," says Vinluan, who earned his Master of Fine Arts degree from the Pratt Institute in New York on a Fulbright Hays Scholarship. "It really breathes life into the area, and it's a wonderful sight to behold amid all the ongoing construction."

Vinluan is a well-regarded master of nonrepresentational art. He has won various awards and accolades and has held several solo exhibitions in Southeast Asia, Japan, the United States and Europe.

Well known for his sensuous style of abstract art, Vinluan draws his creative inspiration from the cerebral and quiet themes of nature.

"A cloud, a tree, a branch, a stream of water—I am moved by observing such things," he says. "I get a natural high from open spaces, skies and horizons. So the temper of my work is very calm."

True to form, Vinluan's vibrant, geometric landscapes along the perimeter walls of GB5 are lush, abstract interpretations of these organic themes. Layered with personal language of textures—stains, drips, smears, and the occasional use of vertical lines and spheres—he mounts a massive, mile-long canvas that will surely leave a lasting artistic impression in the busy urban area.

"It's wonderful to see that Ayala Land and Greenbelt 5 have been very supportive of the art scene," says Vinluan, who is set to paint another series of board panels once further construction is underway. "It's very fulfilling to share my work with the public in this kind of way: art that is accessible and completely free."

Until GB5 finally open its doors in 2007, the Filipino public will not only be able to appreciate Nestor Vinluan's art, they will also be fortunate enough to walk with it.

Symposium on heritage architecture and conservation

THE UNITED ARCHITECTS OF THE PHILIPPINES (UAP) Kalayaan-100 Chapter is conducting a series of symposia on architectural currents to benefit students and professionals alike.

In cooperation with the UAP Student Auxiliary-University of Santo Tomas chapter, the first symposium is set on July 13 at the audiovisual room of the UST College of Architecture, Beato Angelico Bldg.

Speaker is architect Maria Cristina Turalba, author of the book "Philippine Heritage Architecture before 1521 to the 1970s." She will talk about heritage conservation.

Career orientation for architecture graduates will follow with architects Eric Suarez of Active Group, Inc./Turalba & Associates and Jenner Macaballug as speakers. Suarez and Macaballug will discuss housing and computer rendering, respectively.

Entrance is free but only preregistered participants will be admitted. Deadline of registration is July 5. Register through the UAPSA UST chapter president, Joy Ann Cerdon (0920-6044601), or the chapter secretary, Jeannielynne Uy (0921-4864479).

The next symposium is in September at the Central Colleges of the Philippines with architect Dianne Marcelle K. Abistado, senior architect of St. Luke's Medical Center, as speaker. The symposia are sponsored by Crown Asia Compounds, Inc.

Fatima's flower ceramic and bouquets—in a variety of glass, ceramic, or earthenware receptacles on tables with gaily printed linen—now come in varied sizes (items in her last collection come in only two measurements). She now includes landscapes and detailed backdrops with vibrant hues.

"Bouquet for You" and "Mama's Window," for instance, are scenes of preparation, the pretty clutter of freshly cut flowers in disarray, before they are transformed into more studied arrangements.

Through cropped white wooden country window corners or steel lattice and glass, there's a miniature panorama of more foliage and horticulture accoutrement outside.

For the first time, Fatima has done a diptych ("Romy's Row") and triptychs ("Baguio Bed and Breakfast" and "Secret Place 2"). These are renditions of lovely masses of color and greenery outdoors, with cottages, garden paraphernalia, arches and walkways.

The collection shows Fatima Antonio expanding her range and quelling any speculation that her pieces only echo those of her mother's. Fatima Antonio takes a direction all her own.

BREWING THE STORM IN MANNY PACQUIAO

PHOTOGRAPHED BY JUN DE LEON • TEXT BY ARTURO CUEVAS

IN THE punch-mitt routine of famed trainer Freddie Roach, Manny dissolves himself into a bobbing-and-weaving, shifting illusion, safely tucked away from headhunter shots. And each time Pacquiao hits, Roach would swear it was as if a seasoned middleweight fighter was behind that power of a punch.

Pambansang Kamao. People's Champion. How to unravel the phenomenon that is Manny Pacquiao?

To dwell on his celebrity would be just too easy. For hasn't he demolished the invincibility of two Mexican ring legends, first Marco Antonio Barrera and later Erik "El Terrible" Morales? But certainly there's more to the Pacquiao mystique than that for sure.

For like the legendary Sugar Ray Leonard whose rise to fame had been founded on going beyond the mere fundamentals of boxing, the making of the Filipino PacMan is one determined endeavor to be more than a boxer and harness his God-given talent to unite and inspire a whole nation.

"Karangalang bigay ng Mahal na Diyos na maging inspirasyon ng buong bayan," is a Pacquiao oft-repeated victory spiel.

Manny thus was true grit and determination personified anew in training for his fight against former WBC super bantamweight champion Oscar "Chololo" Larios; the PacMan pitching camp at Los Angeles, California, again away from home, sons and pregnant wife. Indeed, it could be said that the Pacquiao source of strength is his monastic way of training; his best fights much like some winning symphonies written in the isolation of the darkest of nights.

And it was this distillation of sacrifice, courage, focus and hard work that the L.A. Camp Pacquiao brought back for the PacMan's homecoming bout for the WBC world superfeatherweight championship vs. Larios at the Big Dome.

TEAM PACQUIAO BONDS even tighter and zaps the pangs of homesickness via the wonders of Manny's laptop, games of chess, communal prayers and some rare joyride in the Porsche of the Pac-Man. Otherwise, it is no bed of roses in the training camp of the People's Champ as pretty soon he's again banging at the double-end striking bag for the speed, rhythm, timing and reflexes that have conspired to send many a foe crashing to the canvas.

No Bed Of Roses For Team Pacquiao

PACQUIAO launches on a daily dose of one thousand crunches and sit-ups to fortify that vaunted PacMan six-pack. Together with the steeled piston legs of a long distance runner and a newly developed killer right, Manny has piled up an armory that very few ring artists could match.

MANNY perfects his footwork via the skipping-rope that segues to the staccato round with the speed bag for punching accuracy, stamina and the blurring speed which, if the occasion demands, all have to be wisely spread over 12 bruising rounds.

Priming for a Ring Tango

PACQUIAO CHASES HIS OWN SHADOW as he primes up fists for that brutal tango atop a square ring where the mastery of tempo, timing and rhythm is an element towards a crown. After roadwork and breakfast, Manny's home is the Wild Card Boxing Club off Vine Street in Hollywood for more quality training time with Russian sparmates and trainer Freddie Roach. The PacMan's gym routine included racking up eight rounds of hard sparring against much-heavier Russian welterweights Vladimir Zykov and Rustam Nugaev.

MANNY somehow finds some solace and comfort in the familiar touch of an old training hand and the company of brother Bobby and compatriot Gerry Penolosa as he tackles the hills of California in a daily six-mile early morning stamina run.

A HERO wraps himself up in familial comfort to muster the courage and inner strength that inspires an entire nation shortly prior to his date with Larios.
